LIFE AT CHS

Taking over the weekly column

OLIVIA FRANKLIN

...it is still very strange not to run into seniors in the hallway or to see anybody eating in the upper lobby during lunch.

Hello Cohasset! I'm Olivia, and as of Saturday, I guess I'm considered a "senior" at CHS. Since Natalie has moved on to bigger and better things (AKA summer, relaxation, and eventually college), I have taken over the "Life at CHS" column for the rest of this year and next year! A little bit of background information: I'm 16, I play lacrosse and run cross country, and you can probably find me working at Del's Lemonade in town any day during the summer. Moving on to what is going on at the High School.

After a hectic weekend of graduation, SATs and subject tests, countless grad parties, and unhealthy amounts of food, life at CHS is back to normal. Well, not entirely normal, seeing as it is still very strange not to run into seniors in the hallway or to see anybody eating in the upper lobby during lunch. I'm still getting used to the fact that my class is the oldest at the school. On Monday, the junior history classes enjoyed a field trip to the JFK Library and Museum. The trip included seeing many exhibits on Kennedy's life, two informative films, and a pit stop at a local McDonald's. Monday was also a big day for CHS sports. Although the girls' tennis team lost a close match in Martha's Vineyard, the boys' baseball team won 8-0 against Westport and will be playing Upper Cape in Quincy on Thursday in the Semi-Finals. Good job both teams!

Tuesday marked the beginning of a heat wave, which will supposedly continue through Friday. Gardening during Environmental Science class will be especially exciting, as it could possibly be warm enough to go outside and actually tend to the crops for once. On another note, the boys' lacrosse team crushed Newburyport 17-6 in the Division 3 quarterfinals on Tuesday and is scheduled to face off against Weston on Thursday. Good luck boys!

On Wednesday, student council vice president and presidential candidates will make campaign speeches to the student body. Student council is looking forward to next year already, hoping to begin new projects in addition to working on the annual blood drives, ice cream fundraisers and dances. Elections for all class officers will take place Friday during lunch.

Other than that, students at CHS are scrambling to complete last-minute assignments, write research papers and study for finals. However, many people seem to be procrastinating even more than usual – is it possible to have senioritis already? I'm concerned. Thirteen days until summer CHS, hang in there!

CAMP, SCHOOL AND ACTIVITIES DIRECTORY

EXCITED ABOUT SUMMER CAMP? BEGIN PREPARING NOW!
By Bette Bussel, Executive Director, American Camp Association, New England

Once final camp decisions have been made and registration logistics are well underway, parents/guardians of first-time campers may be unsure of how to prepare themselves and their children for upcoming summer camp experiences. The American Camp Association, New England offers the following pointers:

1. Pack efficiently— What gear will you need? Your camp offers the best advice—what campers really do need. If a packing list is provided by the camp, carefully follow it. Whether you're filling a daypack for day camp or a duffle, backpack or trunk for resident/overnight camp, remember that more is not necessarily better. Overpacking is the most common camp prep error families make. It creates difficulty in finding essential items quickly, increases the chances that possessions may get lost and burdens the camper.

2. Pack in partnership with the camper— If campers are to manage their belongings while at camp (for the day or for weeks at a time), they need to pack them! Camp experiences teach children valuable life lessons in how to keep track of and to take care of their belongings. If adults do the packing for and not with campers, children don't know what they have or where to find it.

3. Revel in independence— Camp provides an opportunity for each child to benefit as an individual and as a member of a group, from time spent in a world designed exclusively for children. It also offers parents and children a chance to practice normal, healthy separation, for the day or for several days or weeks at a time. At camp, children develop autonomy and a stronger sense of self. They make new friends, build skills, and experience teamwork. And at the end of camp, parents often report their children's increased confidence and sense of independence.

4. Talk, talk, talk —It is only natural that as the first day of camp approaches, some children may experience uneasiness. Encourage your child to talk about these feelings. Let children know that you are confident in their ability to handle the independence that being a camper brings. Remind the child of other times they have been independent — sleepovers with friends or family, etc.

5. Get real — It's important for children and parents to maintain realistic expectations. Camp is a microcosm of the real world; so just like life, there will be highs and lows. Parents should encourage realistic views of what camp will be like, discussing both the high points and the low points children may experience. Remind children that the most important thing is to relax and have fun at camp.

SALOME'S STARS FOR RELEASE WEEK OF JUNE 20, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Family and friends rally around as you confront an unexpected challenge. Some plans will have to be changed until all the fuss and fluster settle down.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Your creative gifts find new outlets for expression this week. Someone (a Libra, perhaps) has ideas that you might find surprisingly appealing. Pay attention.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) You'll soon be able to restart those delayed travel plans. A financial matter you thought was closed could suddenly reopen. Be prepared to take swift, decisive action.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) A romantic relationship takes an unexpected turn. You might be confused about how to react. It's best not to be rushed into a decision that you're not ready to make.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Don't let your pride stand in the way of resolving an emotionally painful situation. This is a good time to deal with it and let the healing finally begin.

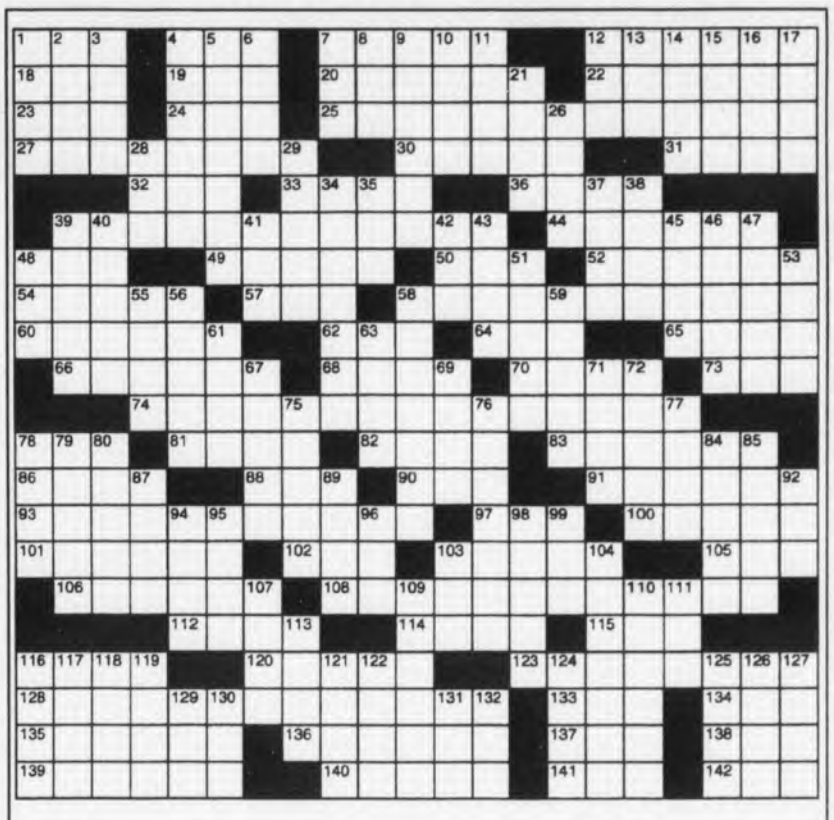
VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) A workplace problem that you've been handling so well suddenly spins out of control. Don't panic. You can rely on your good sense to help you restore order.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Wearing rose-colored glasses won't solve a thorny personal situation. You need to take a hard look at what's happening and then act according to the facts.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Weigh all your options carefully before making any decisions you've been putting off. Then go ahead and plan a weekend of family fun.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) While personal and financial situations continue to improve, some setbacks might occur. But they're only temporary, so hang in there.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Family matters dominate the week. Health problems raise concern but soon prove to be less serious than you had feared. Things start easing up by the weekend.



AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Most situations are calmer now, both at home and on the job. But there's still a chance that a co-worker will set off another round of unpleasantness.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) There's no need to fish for compliments from an admirer who can't say enough nice things about you. The upcoming holiday bodes well for family gatherings.

(c) 2011 King Features Synd., Inc.

BORN THIS WEEK: You love to compete, both on a personal and a sporting level, and you hate to settle for anything less than excellence.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

PANTRY NEEDS GARDENERS

The Cohasset Food Pantry is looking to provide as much fresh produce to its clients during the garden growing months. Co-director of the food pantry Jane Corry is asking gardeners in town to consider donating a portion of their garden's yield to help those who may be struggling.
"I want to bring fresh produce to the pantry and I figured the best way to do that is to appeal to those in town who already have gardens," Corry said.
"Whatever vegetables we could get would be fabulous."

Coughlin offered top job

Selectmen to negotiate contract

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

Pending successful contract negotiations, Michael Coughlin, the current Town Administrator in Westport, will be Cohasset's next Town Manager.

The Board of Selectmen voted unanimously to offer Coughlin the job on Monday night. Second round interviews were conducted with Coughlin and John McAuliffe, the current Town Administer in Webster, Mass., last Wednesday night. After discussing the two choices, and several of them indicating they were leaning toward Coughlin, they decided to take a few days to think over the decision.

"I don't think we can go wrong (with this decision)," said Selectmen Vice Chair Paul Carlson on Monday. "They are both excellent candidates."

When reached on Tuesday Coughlin said he was "deeply honored" by the appointment and had accepted the position.

"Cohasset is a beautiful community, a lot like my present community (Westport is on the South Coast), but closer to Boston," Coughlin said.

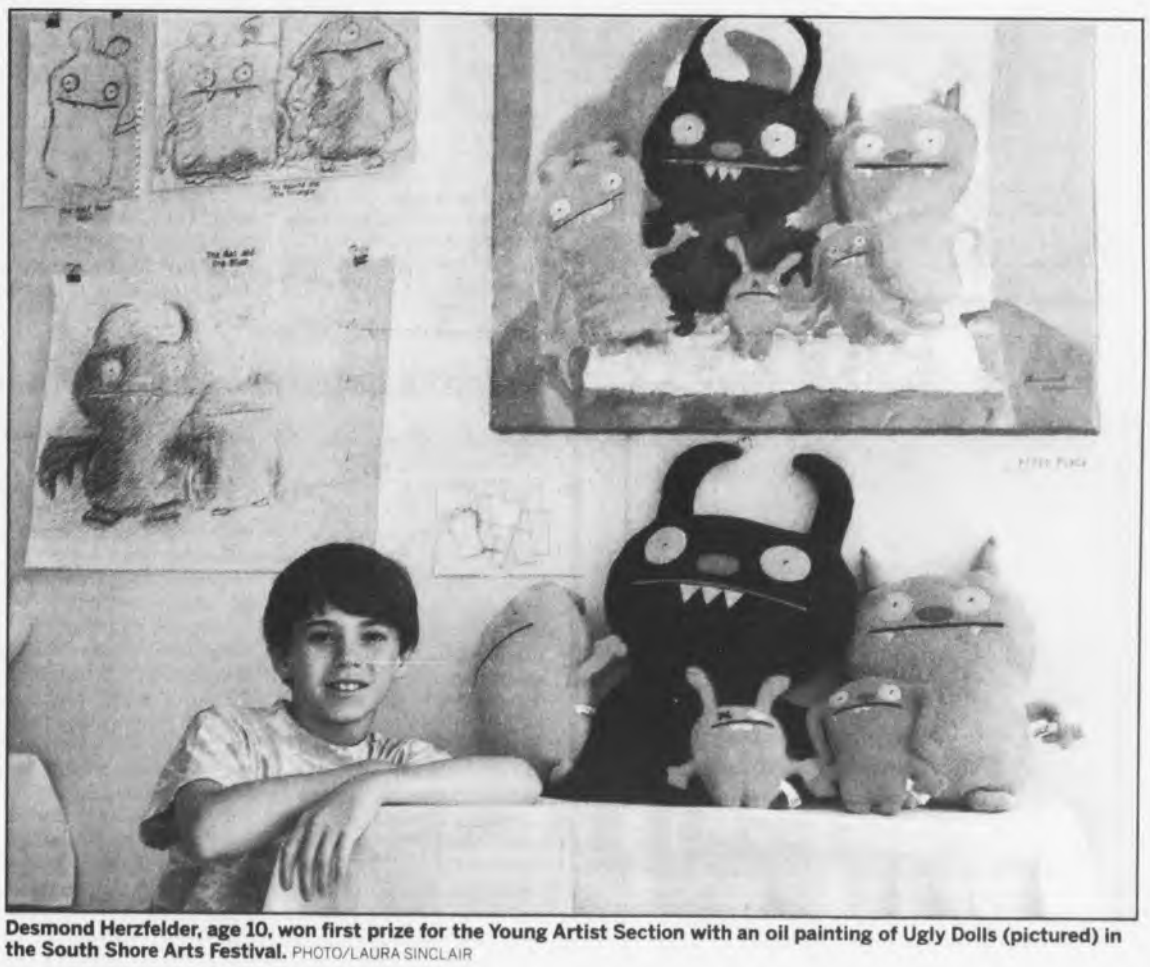
ARTS FESTIVAL

Young artist on the move

Takes first-place in his division



By Sara Hollingshead
shollingshead@wickedlocal.com

First-place winner of the South Shore Art Center Festival's Young Artist Section Grades K-4, Desmond Herzfelder, 10, has always been doodling and drawing; Desmond's mother, Ellen said, "It's who he is."

The Young Artist Section is a part of the South Shore Art Center's upcoming Arts Festival. It encouraged students of all grades to submit pieces of work for selection. In a previous year, Desmond received second place on a submission, so he wanted to try and win first this year.

Weekly lesson with Cohasset artist, Kimberlee Alemian, who also won first prize in oil and acrylics this year and works at the South Shore Art Center, has helped Desmond learn new techniques and develop his art skills. Working together since late 2009, Alemian and Desmond have been able to work on and develop specific skills and ideas

CLEANUP, CLEAR OUT

Hazardous waste collection Saturday

When and where
The Household Hazardous Waste Collection for Cohasset will be held from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., Saturday (June 18) at the Scituate Highway Garage, 68 Captain Peirce Road. No charge to residents for this event. Proof of residency, such as a driver's license, tax bill, or other identification, is required for entrance.

Explanation
What are household hazardous wastes? Any product that is labeled danger, warning, poisonous, corrosive, or flammable that you no longer need should to be disposed of as household hazardous waste. These wastes are harmful to human health and the environment if not disposed of properly. The goal of the program is to keep potentially hazardous waste out sewers and the smoke from waste incinerators, providing extra protection for our air, wetlands and waterways.

Accepted
Examples of wastes that will be accepted include: alkaline batteries, mercury thermometers, drain and oven cleaners, upholstery cleaners, oil or lead-based paint (alkyd), wood cleaners, strippers and varnishes, pesticides, poisons, pool and photo chemicals, automotive cleaners and fluids, grease and rust solvents, aerosols, and metal polishes. All materials should be in their original containers.

Not accepted
Items that will not be accepted include: auto batteries, compressed gas cylinders, explosives, radioactive or medical waste, industrial waste and latex paint (water-based).

Leftover paint
"What should I do with leftover paint?" This is one of the most frequent questions the South Shore Recycling Cooperative (SSRC) is asked. Residents are advised to bring oil based ("alkyd") paint and stain to the Scituate Highway Garage on Saturday.
As for latex paint, the SSRC points out that it is just messy, not hazardous. The liquid can be absorbed with a material such as kitty litter to prevent it from dripping, and the open can disposed of with household trash. Paint should never be poured down indoor or outdoor drains, as they will become clogged.

Usable paint
Thanks to a grant from the Mass. Department of Environmental Protection, the SSRC is partnering with The Paint Exchange on a pilot paint-recycling program.
What is considered "Usable" paint? Interior latex with original container and label; one-gallon size or greater (no quarts please); limit of 15 gallons per household
Before bringing it in, dust off and pop the lid to check that the following have not occurred:
Mold or mildew growth, foul odor, solidification, skinning — a thin layer or skin of paint on the surface, excessive corrosion of the container, curdling (semi solid lumps of paint) or evidence of being frozen).
If any of these things have occurred, stir in some kitty litter, leave the lid off and dispose with your trash.
If your paint passes muster, it will be accepted from on Saturday, June 18 from 9 am -1:30 pm at the Cohasset Transfer Station, 91 Cedar St.

For more information and a list of items accepted at the Household Hazardous Waste collection go to www.ssrcoop.info or call the South Shore Recycling Cooperative 781-329-8318.

Tim Waite

The Mariner caught up with Tim Waite, who is assistant coordinator for the South Shore Arts Festival, at the Art Center this week. PHOTO/MARY FORD

Name: Tim Waite.

Occupation: Photography Instructor at the South Shore Art Center, Web Developer & Designer. Assistant coordinator for the South Shore Arts Festival.

Best day of your life: The days each my kids were born, and the day the plane touched down in Frankfurt, Germany, after serving in the first Gulf War.

Best (or worst) vacation: An awesome 10 days in Crete (best) and the first Gulf War (worst).

Favorite season: Spring.

Favorite holiday: It's probably not considered a "holiday" by most people, but June 6th, D-Day. I can't think of any single day in our history that had so much impact on our nation as a whole. It should be an official US holiday.

Favorite junk food: Marshmallow Peeps. I prefer to puncture the package to let them go a little stale, then attack them like a bad 70's monster film, you know, Godzilla style...

Best book: World War II Books, especially the more recent ones that are based on more thorough research.

Best movie: Lord of the Rings trilogy.

Best TV show: "Dual Survival." Cody and Dave are an awesome "couple".

Best music, group, or artist: Frank Zappa.

Pet peeve: It's a tie between tardiness and people that act as though you don't exist when they pass you on the street. Come on, people, we're all in this together!

Dumbest thing you've ever done: Got mad at my front door when my car's remote wouldn't open it.

Goal: Help other people realize their creative potential with photography.

Person you'd most like to meet: Yeah, well, this is kind of strange, but I got a big kick out of Steven Tyler this year on American Idol. He was so genuinely kind to those young people it made me wish I could meet him and say that I admired him for his kindness.

Biggest worry: That I will awaken to find that there is nothing to worry about.

Best part of Cohasset: Easy. The South Shore Art Center and their annual Arts Festival!

Aquarion calls for voluntary water conservation

Aquarion Water Company is asking customers in Hingham, Hull, and North Cohasset, to voluntarily reduce their water consumption. Since Memorial Day weekend the Company has experienced high water demands during the hot and dry periods. The higher demands are due primarily to watering of lawns through irrigation systems.

The Company is requesting all customers with irrigation systems, both permanent and temporary, to use water wisely. This means limiting the use of an irrigation system to no more than two days per week, before 6 a.m. and after 6 p.m., and ensuring the system is operating properly.

In the event the water demand is not reduced immediately through voluntary measures, the Company will be forced to reduce the water demand through mandatory water restrictions. The water restrictions imposed in 2010 banned the use of sprinklers and irrigation systems, and only allowed watering and outdoor water use on an odd/even basis between 6 and 9 p.m. using hand-held watering devices only.

"In this voluntary phase, we are asking customers to really think about household water use, especially outdoor water use. Customers with irrigation systems are encouraged to act quick and modify water schedules immediately or water restrictions will be forthcoming" said Robert Roland, Aquarion's Director of Operations. "Not only will this lead to a healthier lawn, it will save customers money on their water bills. It is estimated the average irrigation system costs a customer $15 per watering session."

For additional information and conservation tips call the Aquarion's Customer Service Department at 1-800-928-3734, or visit www.aquarionwater.com.

Capital Budget hones in on dedicated vehicle

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

Police Chief Mark DeLuca is making the rounds to town boards in pursuit of permission to establish a police K-9 unit in his department.

At the request of the Selectmen, DeLuca went before the Capital Budget Committee this week. Although no capital request is being sought, the selectmen wanted the committee to look at the potential long-term financial impacts on the town's finances.

At the heart of the issue for the Capital Budget Committee was the creation of the police K-9 necessitates a dedicated car, thereby adding a car to the fleet that will eventually need to be replaced.

DeLuca is not seeking any town funds to start-up or run the specialized unit. Donations totaling more than $23,000 have been received or pledged to cover nearly all the start-up costs.

DeLuca obtained a car from the Quincy Police Department for $5,000 last year. Hull Police Department donated some of the necessary equipment for the vehicle. An anonymous donor has pledged $5,000 to the program. Cape Cod Lumber has donated a kennel saving the program an estimated $5,000. The Cohasset Police Association has offered up to $6,500 to purchase the dog. To help with other incidental costs, such as grooming and veterinary care, the department is working with local businesses for potential discounts, DeLuca said.

After the initial year one start-up costs, DeLuca estimates the annual cost of the K-9 to be about $5,000, including the vehicle maintenance, insurance, boarding, grooming, vet care and food.

The Capital Budget Committee also discussed the "embedded costs" to having a K-9 unit. These costs include covering the K-9 officer's patrol shift while he is at a training session, or if the officer and dog provide mutual aid to another community, Cohasset has to pay that officer's overtime.

"The issue is how this program encumbers the town," said Steve Gaumer, Capital Budget Committee chairman.

Forest Avenue resident Trish Morse has come forward to spearhead the creation of a non-profit organization dedicated to financially supporting the dog throughout its working life. It is the aim of this non-profit to supplement the annual cost of the dog, and potentially the replacements cost of both the dedicated vehicle and dog.

Officer Patrick Reardon, a three-year veteran of the force and Cohasset resident, has volunteered for the K-9 officer/handler position. If approved, Reardon and the dog spend 14-weeks in intense training before hitting the streets and together they take training courses throughout the working life of the dog. After the 14-week training the dog returns to Cohasset for patrol duty for three to six months then goes back for narcotics training.

The majority of local towns have a K-9 officer, including Hull, Hingham, Scituate, Quincy, Rockland and Duxbury. In instances where a K-9 was needed Cohasset has relied on those towns mutual aid for assistance. The mutual aid service is provided at no cost to the town of Cohasset.

For DeLuca, the K-9 would provide an additional service to the town of Cohasset at little to no cost to the taxpayers.

"The dog is going to enhance our ability to make arrests," both in drug-related and other criminal activity, DeLuca said.

The Capital Budget Committee said they wanted to understand the impact on the vehicle fleet and what an additional vehicle could mean for the capital budget a few years from now. Currently, the Capital Budget Committee has created a schedule where they replace one of the four marked vehicles each year. They said they would e-mail DeLuca some specific questions over the next week.

DeLuca will go before the Advisory Committee next week on Tuesday, June 21 at approximately 7:30p.m.

Vandalism, car break-ins, expired license, Skype

By Mary Ford
mford@wickedlocal.com

Vandalism

A Nichols Road resident reported vandalism to some electronic equipment and to his HVAC system last Friday (June 10). The matter is being investigated.

Car break-ins

Police said there were four car break-ins reported on Fairoaks Lane and Sanctuary Road on Monday (June 13). All the cars were unlocked. An $800 Gateway computer, American Express card, and $20 in cash were missing from one of the cars. Nothing was reported missing from the other cars. Detectives are investigating.

Expired license

A 40-year-old Scituate woman is being summonsed to court for unlicensed operation and operating an unregistered motor vehicle following a traffic stop at about 5:43 p.m. on Monday (June 6) near Chief Justice Cushing Highway and Ridge Top Road. Police said the officer on traffic patrol on Route 3A noticed the expired sticker on the license plate and pulled her over. A computer check showed her license had also expired.

Skype

A concerned mother notified police last Monday about the fact that her preteen daughter had been talking on Skype when the person she was talking with made some inappropriate comments. Police said no crime was committed but advise all parents to be vigilant with their children and monitor their computer activity. Police said the person at the other end of a computer connection cannot always be trusted.

Plates seized

An officer on cruiser patrol on Tuesday (June 7) ran a random computer check on the plates on a vehicle parked on Brook Street that revealed the registration had been revoked for nonpayment of insurance. Police seized the plates.

Uninsured

In answering a call about teens swimming in the reservoir at 4:13 p.m. on Wednesday (June 8), police encountered the group returning to their car that was parked on Beechwood Street. A computer check on the plate revealed the registration had been revoked for insurance purposes. The owner of the car, a 26-year-old Hanover woman (who was not present), is being summonsed to court for operating with suspended registration and operating an uninsured motor vehicle.

Minor MVA

At 4:22 p.m. on Wednesday (June 8), police responded to a minor motor vehicle crash at Chief Justice Highway and Beechwood Street. A 2005 Chrysler, operated by a 60-year-old Cohasset woman, who told police she was distracted, "rear-ended" a 2006 Honda, operated by a 26-year-old Rhode Island man. Both cars had pulled into the Gulf station when police arrived.

The Cohasset woman was cited for failure to use care when stopping. Investigation revealed the Rhode Island man's license was suspended and he is being summoned to court to fact that charge.

Citation

A 68-year-old Cohasset man is receiving a citation in the mail for improperly passing another motorist who reported the incident to police at 8:25 a.m. on Thursday (June 9) and provided the license plate. The incident occurred on Sohier Street. The woman reported she was also being tailgated.

Clarinet

Last week, a Cohasset mother reported to police that her daughter's $800 clarinet has been stolen sometime on May 9 after 3 p.m. at the middle school. She filed a report with the police on Thursday (June 9).

Necklace

A young mother and her two children were walking on Parking Way last Friday (June 10) at about 10:50 a.m. when they found a necklace with a silver cross. Police have the item and so far no one has come to claim it.

Paving payment

Sewer seeks town to share in cost

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

Residents of the Little Harbor district and others that frequent the area were over the moon to have their streets – at long last – paved to a smooth asphalt shine.

But, now there is an issue about who is responsible for a portion of the cost. Back in the fall the Sewer Commission, using money from the Little Harbor sewer expansion project bond authorization, stepped in to pay to finish the last pieces of the paving.

Last fall, a tentative, if not informal, agreement was discussed between Sewer Commission chair John Beck, then Town Manager Bill Griffin and the Capital Budget Committee that a portion of the cost for the paving, about $200,000, would be sought at Town Meeting through the capital stabilization fund.

The reasoning, according to Beck, was the sewer work did not cause all the damage to the roads. Water, electric and gas work was done concurrent with sewer work and, in more than one place, created a need for more than one trench to be dug in the road.

Beck and town engineer Mark Brennan came to the Capital Budget Committee Tuesday night to revisit the issue.

"The damage to the roadways was substantially more than caused by the sewer work itself," Beck said. "All residents use these roads, not just the 450 homes that are part of the sewer project."

Beck said the issue was fairness and equity.

Roughly $1.2 million of the sewer project's budget was spent on paving the streets that were dug up. According to Brennan, the sewer project budgeted for a patch and overlay paving, but not the full paving the streets ended up requiring. That's why, he said, the cost was about $200,000 more than anticipated.

The town expects to receive $34,500 from National Grid for their part in disturbing the road, which leaves about $165,000 left for the town to potentially pick up.

Interim Town Manager Steve Lombard supported the town taking on this portion of the paving cost.

The Capital Budget Committee said there were too many unanswered questions to make a firm recommendation for or against on Tuesday night. They asked why the costs had not been anticipated in the original contract for the project and why more money couldn't be sought from National Grid.

However the Capital Budget recommends the issue will have to go before Town Meeting for its final say.

Town Meeting would have to authorize about $200,000 to be transferred from the Capital Stabilization Fund to the Sewer Commission's general expenses fund to pay down the debt associated with the paving. It's likely it would be done in $20,000 increments over a 10-year period.

Mysterious foam in the harbor

Students' research earns prize at state science fair

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

"No one knew why the foam was forming...there were some ideas, but there wasn't anything conclusive."
Maggie O'Grady

If you happen to be near Cohasset Harbor as an outgoing tide causes the water from the Gulf River to flow under the Border Street bridge and out into the harbor, you have noticed something that doesn't quite look right: billowy piles of off-white foam bobbing in the rapids and sticking to the golden rocks at the water's edge.

The foam has been a part of the harbor's ecosystem for several years, but as of last year the mystery of the foam, mainly why it was occurring remained.

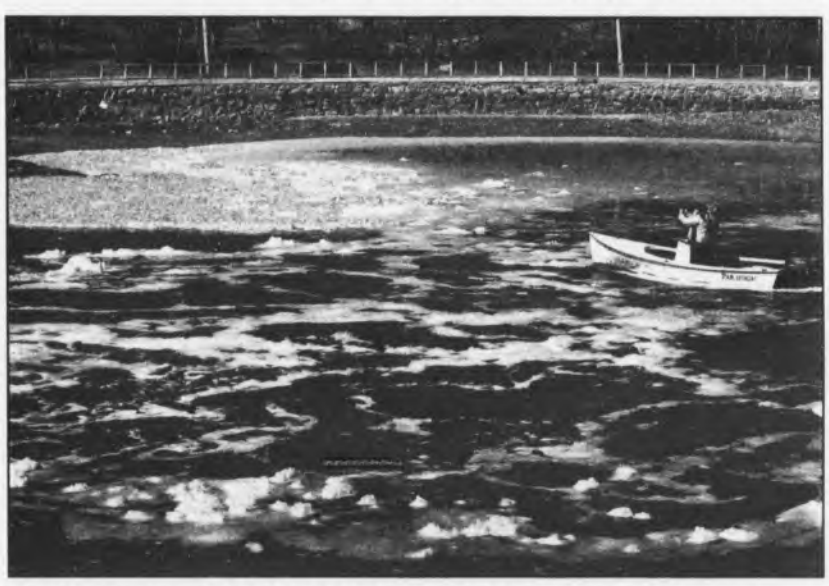
That is until three Cohasset High School juniors decided to put a microscope, literally and figuratively, on the foam. Over the past year, Ellie Tedeschi, Maggie O'Grady and Emily Castro have conducted research to determine the cause and source of the mysterious foam. Their project, which initially began as a Center for Student Coastal Research (CSCR), recently took a second place ribbon at the Massachusetts State Science and Engineering Fair.

"When we started we were hoping to solve a local mystery, but we finished with not only recognition from the state for our research but and experience which will follow us far beyond college," 16-year-old Emily said.

Throughout the science fair process they were asked a key question: why this project for the science fair? And they had what may have been a very unique answer.

"We were doing the research first; the science fair project came second," said Ellie, 16.

All three of the students have been working at CSCR for several years. They have analyzed the water quality at various locations throughout town. Their interest was piqued when the subject of the foam came up at a CSCR meeting last spring.



"No one knew why the foam was forming...there were some ideas, but there wasn't anything conclusive," Maggie, 17, said.

The trio decided to submit a grant proposal to the Marjot Foundation, an organization based in Falmouth that supports research done by public high school students on environmentally, related research. Cohasset High science teacher Ann Thomae signed on as their advisor. They received a $2000 grant to purchase the supplies and equipment required to conduct the research into this pervasive issue.

"We love our harbor and we live with the foam, it is literally in our faces almost everyday...Citizens who have lived in Cohasset for many years have noticed the rise of this nuisance, and to most it represents an environmental problem since it wasn't noticeable before," Thomae said.

The students began observing the harbor and setting up testing sites in both the harbor and the Gulf River last spring. Once a week during the summer they took samples and conducted multiple tests on them. These test included basic water quality factors (oxygen levels, salinity, conductivity, temperature) as well as lab tests to measure levels of chlorophyll a, nitrates, phosphates, enterococci bacteria and pH.

The students made a commitment to the project and estimate they spent roughly five hours per week collecting samples and conducting these tests.

Their initial hypothesis was that the high concentrations of foam in Cohasset Harbor are the result of the high levels of phosphates and nitrates entering the harbor from pollutants such as detergents and fertilizer runoff through the Gulf River. The presence of phosphates and nitrates increase the growth of the algae phaeocystis, which when stimulated by the rapids under the Border Street bridge cause the foam.

After the extensive testing they discovered their hypothesis was partially supported, in that high levels of nutrient cause the algal blooms that are then aerated to form the foam. But, there was something else occurring they found out through their research.

At the source of the Gulf River, which is fed by several small streams and wetlands in Scituate and Cohasset, there have historically high levels of nitrates measures by CSCR groups in recent years. The nitrates create the ideal environment for algae to grow. When the algae flow down the river with the tide, there are fewer and fewer nutrients, and therefore food, for the algae to feed on. The algae die as results, forming a gel-like substance that sinks to the bottom of the river.

The rapids under the Border Street bridge caused the algal gel to be aerated, forming the masses of foam.

The group also found the foam itself is quite dangerous, with off the charts bacteria levels, but that is not impacting the bacteria levels in the harbor.

Maggie said the key to lessening the foam is to lessen fertilizer and other chemicals used on lawns.

"There will always be foam from the churning of the water, but if there are smaller algae blooms there will be smaller amounts of foam," Maggie said.

All three of the students say they love science and hope to pursue the subject in some respect as they continue their education.

In the meantime, they are already thinking about continuing their research on the foam this summer, but from a slightly different angle.

"We want to see how the foam is affecting organisms in the area," Ellie said.

The trio is the first - at least in the past decade - to enter the state science fair, let alone do so well.

"It is not surprising to me that these three won at the regional level and came in the tip three at the state level since the important work that all students perform and report on specifically out of CSCR is above and beyond what is typically seen at the state science fair," Thomae said.

Furry friends

Just days after the tornados and severe storms ripped through parts of western Massachusetts, the Scituate Animal Shelter welcomed four dogs and four kittens from Springfield's Thomas J. O'Connor Animal Shelter. The animals were at the Springfield shelter before the storms hit, and were selected to be transferred to make room for an overwhelming number of incoming pets that had been displaced. The TJ O'Connor shelter did not sustain damage from the violent weather. At the Scituate Animal Shelter, the new animals received checkups and routine vaccines, and spent their first few days adjusting to their new surroundings. Each will have a professional behavior evaluation, which highlights the dogs' personalities and helps in the adoption process. There are a wide variety of dogs within the Springfield group, from a young Daschund mix named Twizzler to a mature male Cocker Spaniel named Brady, who is blind. Two other dogs, Bambi and Chuck, were also part of the relocated group.

The female kittens are approximately 10-12 weeks old, and are ready for adoption. To learn more about the shelter's adoptable animals, visit: www.ScituateAnimalShelter.org or stop in during public hours.

That is the news for this week. Send in all your information for next week's column to me no later than Tuesday by 5 pm.

Taking the retirement route

Author Susan Trausch to speak at library

By Marylou Lawrence
Special to the Mariner

Hingham resident Susan Trausch had worked as a columnist at the "Boston Globe" for 32 years when, in 2005, at age 60, she took a severance package and bolted out the door.

Initially, her transition to retirement made her feel like a "plucked chicken in a new barnyard." After all, Trausch was no slouch as a writer — she had received several awards for her editorials and her business column, "Out to Lunch," and while she relished the freedom of no more deadlines, she missed the creative challenges and intellectual satisfaction of her job. What would it be like to leave her identity behind? Would she need to start over and carve out a new niche for herself?

As a writer, Trausch worked out her angst through her craft, and five years after leaving the Globe, she published "Groping Toward Whatever," a rumination on retirement. She will speak about her thoughts on Thursday, June 23, at 7 p.m., as part of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library's "Next Chapter" series.

Like her columns, the book is entertaining and honest, her tone nostalgic, irreverent, and funny. Trausch hooks readers in with sassy chapter titles that keep the pages turning, for example, in "Carcass Maintenance," she describes "blowing an hour on carcass care before getting out the door for a walk," a luxury she could never afford with a full-time job. In "Money and Mortality" she talks about being startled by the realization that at age 60 she may have more years left than what she's worked, so she begins to pay attention to issues of health and financial planning details that she had never bothered with before.

Trausch's days soon fill with relaxed phone conversations with friends and lunches that linger into the late afternoon; she joins a book club, a writers' group, a gym; she takes up pottery and French. In "Alice," she tenderly describes her 86 year-old mother-in-law's descent into Alzheimer's and how grateful Trausch was that she now had the time to share this last year with the woman she so loved.

In the "The Age Thing," she remembers "the kid on the Red Line train (who) stood to offer me his seat...who obviously didn't recognize fitness." Trausch rejected his kind gesture and insisted on standing as she sucked in her stomach and tried not to think about sore arches.

And then there are her snappy lines of advice such as, "There's no pasture out here, folks. It's more like an airport...all kinds of aircraft...offering boundless choices...the world waits."

Her view of keeping up with technology is shameless —"I'm not LinkedIn, I don't Twitter or get Tweets, and I got on Facebook by mistake while trying to send an e-mail to somebody who was in there on purpose."

For Susan Trausch, retirement is "a lot like jazz. It can be wild and wailing one minute as it takes the melody into outer space, then come back down to earth, mellow and familiar the next...It's the great leveler. We can be who we are...it's about balance, about figuring out what's important."

Now, two years later, is Trausch still thinking the same way about retirement? Is she still content with her freedom? What does she "do" today? Whatever she tells us is certain to be honest and funny. 7 p.m., Thursday, June 23, at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Don't miss it. Refreshments will be served and Trausch's book will be available for purchase. It makes a wonderful gift for the new retiree.

The talk is free and open to the public. No pre-registration is necessary.

"Next Chapter" is funded by grants from the Social Service League of Cohasset and by a federal Institute of Museum and Library Services grant awarded by the MA Board of Library Commissioners.

For Michele, one of the greatest advances in cancer care has been the one on the South Shore.

When Michele needed treatment for breast cancer, she was thankful that she could receive world-renowned care at Dana-Farber/Brigham and Women's Cancer Center in clinical affiliation with South Shore Hospital. And she had confidence knowing that our specialists, focused on cancer, were providing the expert care she needed. But she also found something more: how important it was to be treated in a place that not only cared for her cancer, but also for her life.

"It's a place filled with hope," said Michele. And having all the integrated services she needed close to home helped her maintain a sense of normalcy through her treatments. "With two small kids, I don't know how I would have managed otherwise," she explained. "Having this level of cancer care on the South Shore — it means everything to me."

Grow a row for the pantry

Food Pantry is looking for donations of garden vegetables

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

Ask any nutritionist and they will tell you vegetables are the cornerstone of a healthy diet.

But, when families are having a difficult time putting food on the table, a well-rounded nutritious meal is not always an option.

For that reason, the Cohasset Food Pantry is looking to provide as much fresh produce to its clients during the garden growing months. Co-director of the food pantry Jane Corry is asking gardeners in town to consider donating a portion of their garden's yield to help those who may be struggling.

"I want to bring fresh produce to the pantry and I figured the best way to do that is to appeal to those in town who already have gardens," Corry said. "Whatever vegetables we could get would be fabulous."

One family has already answered the call. The Askjaers of Jerusalem Road have volunteered to donate some of their garden's yield to the pantry over the summer and early fall months. They have already brought in fresh lettuce, arugula and other greens.

"As fast as these fresh vegetables come in, they're off the shelves," Corry said, adding clients are excited about produce when it's available.

Jennifer Askjaer saw an item in the Mariner about the request to donate garden veggies and decided it would be the ideal place to send it.

"Right now we have tons of lettuce, spinach, arugula and I'm always trying to give it away to my friends," Askjaer said. The garden, which she and her husband, Michael, started last spring, she said has been the best thing for her two boys, Nathan, 4 and Nicholas, 2.

Brothers Nathan, 4, and two-year-old Nicholas Askjaer help their parents Jennifer and Michael maintain their backyard garden. The family recently started donating some of their garden fresh vegetables to the Cohasset Food Pantry. PHOTO BY NANCY WHITE

Askjaer has involved the boys in the process of planting, weeding, harvesting, eating and now donating the vegetables from the garden.

"I hope to bring a box to the pantry every week – as long as we have the yield. It would be great to get in a regular routine with the kids," Askjaer said.

Their garden is about 20-by-20 feet and has three rows of fresh garden goodies: tomato, zucchini, asparagus, garlic, artichoke, cantaloupe, and snap peas, just to name a few.

The fresh produce received from local gardeners would complement the pantry staples clients routinely receive year round. Clients are able to come to the food pantry every other week and leave with a bag of paper goods, some meat (chicken, hamburger and, if available, hot dogs), canned vegetables and other sundries. They are also given a voucher for Tedeschi's to purchase a gallon of milk and a dozen eggs.

Corry is still facing an increase demand for the pantry's services. They are serving over 70 individuals and families in Cohasset.

"It's not just us either. I've talked to other food pantries in the area and everybody is in the same boat," Corry said.

The garden vegetables would go a long way to providing the pantry's clients with the ingredients for nutritious meals.

Corry is also looking into placing a table at the Farmer's Market so residents can buy a fresh vegetable(s) from a market vendor and donate it to the pantry right then and there.

How to help

Do you have a garden? Fresh vegetables may be left at the Food Pantry on Mondays, in a container placed outside the door. The pantry also is open to receiving vegetables and other food items on Tuesday mornings from 8:30 to 9:30a.m. Corry will arrange pick up of vegetables from anyone unable to come to the Food Pantry. Please contact the pantry at the number below for more information.

If you don't have a garden, there are other ways to help. The pantry is in constant need of donations, both monetary and food items.

For food item they are in need of canned white potatoes, coffee, tea, peanut butter, jams, jellies, tuna, condiments, juice, canned fruit (with Splenda), dish detergent, bar soap and toothpaste.

As a reminder, the pantry does not accept expired and opened products.

Donations can be dropped off at the rear entrance of St. Anthony's Rectory on South Main Street from 8:30 to 9:30 a.m. Tuesdays, at Stop & Shop or at local churches on Sundays. Donations may also be left at the St. Anthony Parish Center, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 3.m.

To give a monetary donation, the food pantry mailing address is Cohasset Food Pantry, P.O. Box 297, Cohasset, MA 02025.

To contact the food pantry call 781-383-0219, ext. 25. Someone will return the call.

Taylor Golz selected for Economics for Leaders Program

Taylor Golz of Cohasset, a junior at Boston College High School, was selected from over 2,800 applicants to participate in the National Economics for Leaders Program this summer.

From July 24, until July 31, 2011 Taylor will attend conferences and seminars at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tennessee. Taylor and six other BC High students were selected by a Foundation for Teaching Economics committee at UC-Berkeley.

The program, run by the Foundation for Teaching Economics, admits 300 students per year to its one-week summer program at various colleges throughout the country. Students will learn skills to be more effective leaders and will learn how to employ economic analysis when considering difficult public policy choices.

The other six BC High students will attend conferences at six different universities and colleges: Babson College, College of Wooster, Hillsdale College, UCLA, The College of William and Mary and UC Santa Barbara.

The Foundation for Teaching Economics introduces young individuals, selected for their leadership potential, to an economic way of thinking about national and international issues and to promote excellence in economic education by helping economics teachers become more effective educators.

Exchange program

The Scituate-Sucy Sister City Committee, an outgrowth of the Scituate-Cohasset-Sucy (High Schools) French Exchange, is seeking host families in Cohasset and Scituate for a small group of French high school students who will be spending a few weeks in these towns this summer.

The main group of 12 will be here from July 10-24 and participate in English classes, cultural excursions, and recreational activities. An additional three students will come independently at a mutually agreed upon time over the summer. You do not need to speak French to host one of these students, nor do you need to have a high school student in your household. You will enjoy learning about life in Sucy, France and make connections there, which could lead to further exchanges in the future. To volunteer, contact Beth Marat at bmarat@cohassetk12.org as soon as possible.

Tennis benefit

Cohasset's longest-running tennis tradition once again swings into action this summer to benefit Children's Hospital Boston. The weekend event takes place July 15 – 17 and is open to tennis enthusiasts of all levels and anyone else who would like to rally for Children's.

The Benefit begins Friday, July 15 at 7 p.m. at the Lightkeeper's Residence on Cohasset Harbor. The evening is a community tribute to Children's Hospital Boston and includes light fare and an opportunity to bid for your favorite team or player. The event continues with mixed-doubles, ladies' doubles and junior single tennis matches on Saturday, July 16th on private courts throughout Cohasset.

Players of all levels and abilities are welcome. Finals take place on Sunday, July 17th on the grounds of the Roy estate, former residence of event founder Jesse Bancroft Cox.

You don't have to play the game to serve the cause! Come to the Friday night "Rally for Children's" and place your bids — or spend a summer afternoon cheering players.

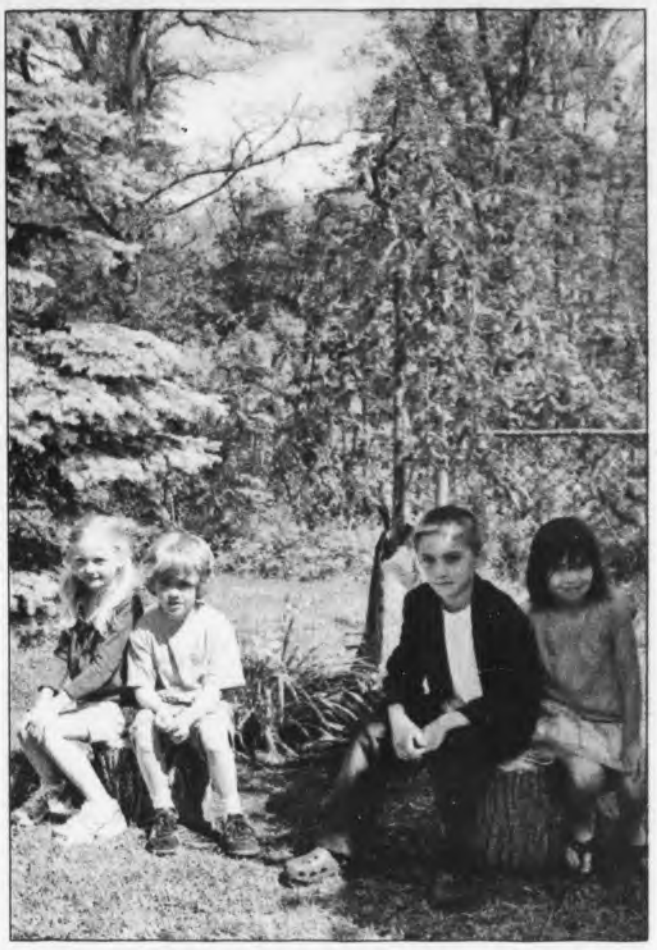
HSAR holds sixth annual Fur Ball



Hull Seaside Animal Rescue (HSAR) a 501 (c) (3) non-profit, no-kill cat shelter is holding their sixth annual Fur Ball on June 25, from 7-10 at the Hull Yacht Club. Tickets are $25 per person and can be purchased at the door or at hsar.org. All proceeds from the Fur Ball will go directly to HSAR for the care and shelter of homeless cats in Hull and surrounding towns.

"The Fur Ball is a fantastic way to enjoy great food and dancing with friends as well as take in beautiful views of the sunset, Hull Bay and the Boston skyline. And the price of a ticket will go directly toward helping and caring for our beautiful cats and kittens." said Stephanie Seal, HSAR board member.

Ticket price includes a hot and cold dinner buffet, salad, appetizers, desserts, coffee and tea, as well as ballroom dancing lessons from local professionals with plenty of music to practice by. A cash bar will also be open. The $25 fee also includes three raffle tickets with more available to purchase during the Ball. Raffle items include gift certificates from local restaurants and businesses as well as silent auction items to bid on such as a clambake for six from Jake's Restaurant or a birthday party at Hull's Carousel.

The Hull Seaside Animal Rescue, a no-kill shelter, was founded in 1999 by a handful of concerned citizens that understood the need to establish an animal rescue and shelter program. Because of space constraints, cats are the only residents presently at the shelter.

I can hear the birds again...

During one of our morning walks one day, I noticed that things seemed unusually quiet. It was a beautiful spring day and I could not hear the birds singing. Everything seemed quieter.

Later that week, I saw an ad in the paper for Mass Audiology and their Free Hearing Evaluation. My husband and I both made an appointment to have our hearing evaluated within the week.

The staff was so nice. Everyone had a very positive attitude and were very educated on hearing loss and how it affected our quality of life. They really took the time to listen to our concerns and answered all of our questions openly and honestly.

I was then able to make an educated and informed decision about the right hearing devices for myself.

Now we are back to enjoying our morning walks and I just love being able to hear those birds sing again.

YOUNG ARTIST

while expanding his work.

As a fourth-grader at Derby Academy, "Desmond has an innate talent," Alemian explained; "He is very dedicated to his artwork and pushes himself. It's an outside project that he puts a lot of time and effort into and as a result, he has come so far."

Desmond relies on a wide variety of objects and people for his subject matter — drawing sketches of human beings and his sister, acorns, fire extinguishers, and using oil pastels to draw Nerfertiti and other Egyptian gods, Desmond is skilled in a variety of techniques and practices. Alemian wants him to work with subject matter that he can relate to and interests him; that are simple but not common. As a result Alemian and Desmond found what they call the "Ugly Dolls."

These "Ugly Dolls" inspired Desmond, and using oil pastels, he was able to create his winning piece, "5 Friends." Although he said he was nervous before the winners were announced, Desmond said he was "very happy and excited that he won first prize." He also explained that Derby Academy has an art gallery that he would love to have his artwork displayed in one day.

Desmond had his first art show at the beginning of June in his house. Inviting his friends, family, and teachers, he was able to explain his artwork to his guests, which Alemian explained allows him as the artist to learn more about his own work and technique.

Desmond hopes to improve his art technique and continue with the skill over time, and one of his main goals is "to work from memory to create a doodle that seems real." Alemian hopes to "give Desmond the tools he needs so he can accomplish his goals."

In addition to many other artists' pieces including Karen Shulman's 'Stairway to Heaven,' which won Best in Show (Juried Exhibition) and nearly 100 other juried arts craft artists, Desmond's work will be on display at the South Shore Art Center Festival this weekend.

The Arts Festival begins on Friday June 17, 2-7p.m.; Saturday June 18, 10a.m. – 7p.m.; and Sunday June 19, 12-5p.m.

For more information or a schedule of events, please visit: www.ssac.org/ or call 781-383-2787.

Talking about their town

Student work featured at Arts Festival

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

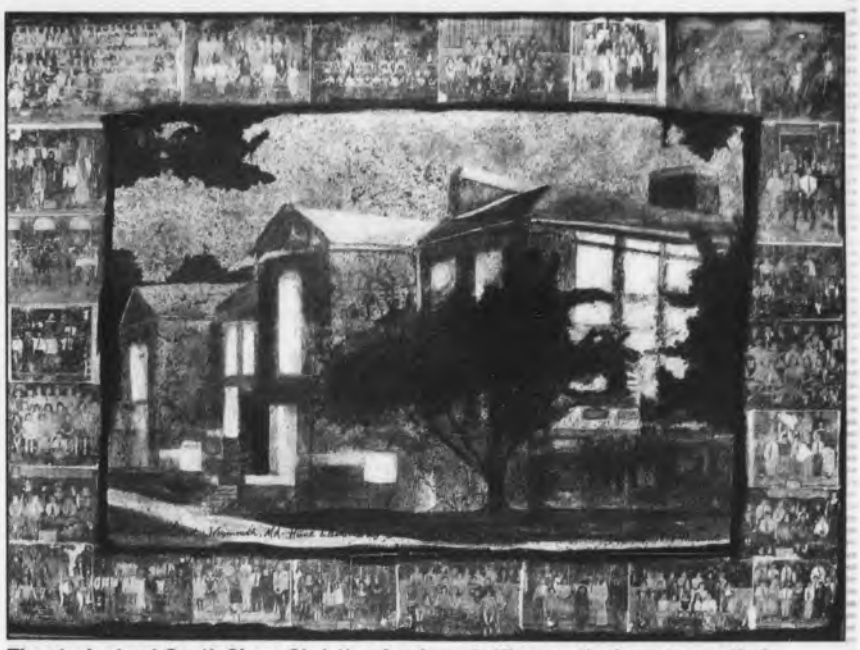
Thousands from all over the South Shore will descend on Cohasset Common to take part in the many traditions, art and music that is the South Shore Art Center's Arts Festival.

The annual festival, celebrating its 56th year, turns the Common into an art showcase. Highlights include the more than 100 juried artist booths offering unique and handcrafted products, live musical entertainment across multiple genres, a juried art show featuring multiple mediums and a diverse offering of delicious food, like First Parish's lobster rolls and Second Congregation's strawberry shortcake.

This year's festival also includes a tent featuring a display that speaks to the heart of what the South Shore Art Center does day in and day out, all year long.

The non-profit Art Center, which provides opportunity for artistic pursuits for all ages and draws from all over the South Shore, asked 20 local high schools to create a canvas to represent their community. The result "Our Towns: Outside the Frame" is a collection of canvases as unique as the towns they represents.

High schools from all over the South Shore – as far away as East Bridgewater High and as close as Cohasset High – took part in the project.



"We're absolutely bowled over by what these kids came up with. These canvasses have unbelievable takes on their community," said Heather Collins, the Art Center's director of community programs.

Some residents may recall the Art Center utilized the same concept and theme six years ago to celebrate their 50th anniversary. At that time 14 schools participated. They decided to bring back the project and this time got even more high schools to participate.

"It was the same themed but we got a complete different set of canvasses," Collins said. The broad theme enabled the schools and the students to use their creativity to full advantage.

Collins was excited to have a mix of schools in the area take part in the Festival and special installation. A mix of public, private, parochial and charter schools are involved.

The schools were each provided with a three-by-four foot stretched canvas and five half-gallons of paint (one of each of the primary colors, plus black and white). It was up to the schools to choose who completed the project.

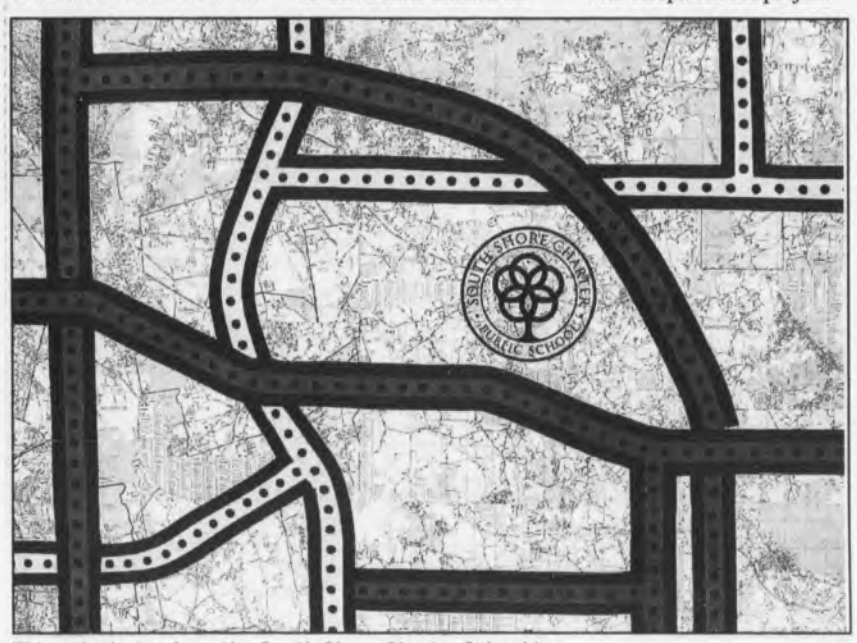
The students at South Shore Christian Academy in Weymouth chose to use their building as the centerpiece of their canvas. The building was formerly a Weymouth elementary school. COURTESY PHOTOS

"These canvasses are a labor of love for these schools...when we see those art teachers walk through the door to deliver the canvas you can see the look of pride on their faces," Collins said. "The amount of effort and dedication is so magnificent."

Each year the Art Center features local students' artwork because their work with local schools is so integral to their mission.

One of the masterpieces comes from Whitman-Hanson Regional High School. They chose their school as their central image because the building is where both communities are drawn together. After two days of brainstorming and sketching, the class of 22 students had a group discussion and voted on the image. Then, they decided on two meaningful materials to work with on the canvas – chocolate chip cookies and dried cranberries.

The two materials represent the two distinct towns: Whitman is known as the home of the state cookie, the Toll House chocolate chip cookie, and Hanson is know for its cranberry bogs and for being home to Ocean Spray.



"The entire façade of the school is made from live foodstuffs," Collins said. "I only hope the many layers of glaze over the canvas will keep the canvas from being quite popular with the area wildlife!"

The installation is supported by some of the town's cultural councils (Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham Hull, Marshfield, Plympton, Plymouth, Rockland, Scituate and Whitman, local agencies of the Massachusetts Cultural Council) and through a sponsorship from Rockland Trust.

The "Our Towns: Outside the Frame" exhibit can be found in the sponsor tent on the flagpole side of the common.

Participating schools include: Braintree High, Bridgewater-Raynham Regional High, Cohasset High, Derby Academy, Duxbury High, East Bridgewater High, Hingham High, Hull High, INLY School, Marshfield High, Norwell High, Notre Dame Academy, Plymouth High, Rockland High, Sacred Heart School, Scituate High, Silver Lake High School, South Shore Charter School, South Shore Christian Academy, Weymouth High, Whitman/Hanson Regional High School.

The Arts Festival begins today, Friday, June 17, 2 to 7 p.m.; Saturday, June 18, 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.; and Sunday, June 19, noon to 5p.m. A free trolley shuttles visitors from parking at South Shore Music Circus. A $5 entrance donation is requested. For a complete schedule of events, visit www.ssac.org, or phone 781-383-2787.

This submission from the South Shore Charter School is one of 20 canvasses created by South Shore high school students. The canvasses are all meant to represent the school's town and community.

OUR VIEW

Signature event

There is nothing quite like the South Shore Arts Festival to kick off summertime in Cohasset.

Of course there is nothing quite like Cohasset Common this time of year. The grass is so green right now – showing off the white colonial structures that surround it as well as the First Parish Meetinghouse.

Thanks to recent renovations – Meetinghouse Pond has never looked better.

Combine that pristine setting with art, artisans, music and good food and you have an unbeatable combination.

We know that planning for the next Arts Festival gets going every year right after the event. Pulling off a successful festival every year is due to the hard work of staffers at the center and an army of dedicated volunteers.

Over the years the Second Congregational Church Strawberry Fest and lobster rolls at First Parish – have only added to make the event as delicious as it is a visual delight. There is also plenty of musical entertainment for our enjoyment.

The Arts Festival is one of our favorite Cohasset events. There is something wonderfully non-commercial about it. While there is plenty to purchase – the mix of selling and viewing is accomplished in a non-carnival-like atmosphere.

There are no rides and no street-hawkers that would provide an attraction for children – yet children love the festival. They can enjoy the kids' tent or just do cartwheels!

It never ceases to amaze us how many out-of-towners come to Cohasset. While parking nearby can be a challenge, there is the option of parking at the Deer Hill School and riding the trolley into the village area. (Please take advantage of this service!)

We cannot help being proud of Cohasset when the Festival rolls around. It is a great weekend to show off our town. The Festival is a gem and adds to the charm and ambiance of this small town.

Be sure to support the Festival and take a moment to thank the volunteers and organizers.

Buddy Poppies celebrate and help veterans

The Cohasset VFW Post 9146 would like to thank everyone who assisted our local efforts with their very generous donations and their support of all Veterans by displaying a "Buddy Poppy". In spite of a difficult economy, we found that citizens still gave generously to the Buddy Poppy Program. All proceeds will be used to assist widows and children of VFW Veterans.

The following Cohasset businesses were especially helpful and supportive this year: Shaws, Stop & Shop, Goodwin Graphics, Curtis Liquors, Cohasset Pizza, Leo's Gulf, 3A Pizza and Grill, Tedeschi's Food Mart, French Memories, Atlantic Bagel, Village Greenery, Dragonfly Embroidery, Mary Lou's News, Pilgrim Cooperative Bank and Aubuchon Hardware.

We would also like to recognize and thank the following volunteers who gave so generously of their time: "The 80 Club" – Louie Longo, Gordon Flint, Ralph and Marie Perroncello, George Haley, Tony Muzzi and Tom Healy. Also helping out were Polly Litchfield, Paul St. John, Bill Higgins, Kevin McArdle, Brad Goodwin, Ron Goodwin, Kathy Bailey, Virginia Najmi, Sue Zarella, Elena Dear, Owen O'Malley, Dr. Joe Godsik, Bill DeGiacomo, Ed Graham, Bill White, Linda Fechter, Jessy Sykucki, Pat Laugelle, Luann Kramer and Peter Tolman.

Anyone interested in knowing more about the Veterans of Foreign Wars, their programs or to make a donation should contact the Cohasset VFW Post 9146.

Thank you once again for your support and appreciation of our veterans.

No need for police K9

K9, can't see a need for a K9, we might spend a couple hundred a year to call one if needed. Just the overtime to pay for another police officer for 14 weeks to cover while the future dog officer is in training could cover years of calling in another town's dog plus the food and vet bills.

The cost of another take home car is also an added expense, paying for gas and maintenance and at $4 a gallon all at tax payer expense (it is also a nice tax free perk) that is added to the two lieutenants and one detective take home cars. They all started out as cheap used vehicles but will eventually have to be replaced with new ones along with the four regular marked cruisers on a regular basis.

Cohasset is half the population of these other towns' maybe they need them but we don't need a K9.

Roads, a delight

What a delight it is to traverse Jerusalem Road again without challenging the resilience of our automobile chassis. To Mr. Mark Brennen and his professional and talented staff go our enthusiastic appreciation.

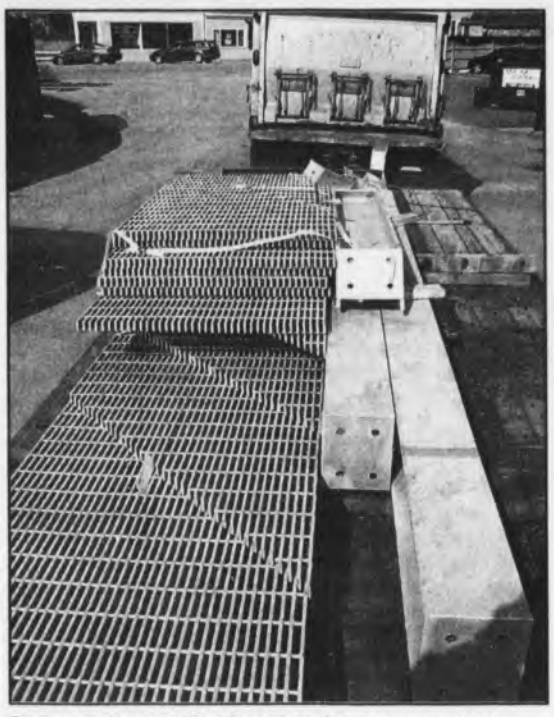
MAKING TRACKS

So, what is a vertical sluice gate?

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN



Little Harbor Project —Well, it finally happened, all the roads involved in the Little Harbor Water, Sewer and Drainage Project have been paved. We have had comments that the roads around Little Harbor have never looked nicer. However, there are a few small tasks yet to be done. One of these is to dress up the edge of the roads along Jerusalem Road that were just paved as well as parts of Atlantic and Jerusalem along the water that were paved late last year. Soon, even these will be completed.

Jacobs Meadow Outfall Project — Once the gate chamber concrete walls were finished, the contractor had to construct a platform across the top of the walls. However, instead of being a solid floor, it was constructed of galvanized steel grates. That way it will support the necessary construction activities but will allow rain and snow to pass through. The first photo shows the grates and supporting beams as they arrived on the contractor's trailer. The grates are to the left of the photo and the supporting beams are to the right.

The contractor first had to bolt the beams around the inside perimeter of the gate chamber. These then in turn supported beams that went from side to side across the top of the gate chamber to support the grates that would become the working "floor." The beams across the chamber are like floor joists that you will find in your home supporting the floors.

Now, let's talk a bit about one of the major functional parts of this project. These functional parts are not necessarily easily seen, but that are a vital part of the project. These are also the components that make this project function and react to various situations that occur in the channel and harbor. One of these functioning components is the vertical sluice gate.

So, what is a vertical sluice gate? It is really a vertical sliding door that opens or closes allows water to flow between the Cohasset Harbor and Jacobs Meadow. When it is open, water can flow from the meadow into the harbor, or, based on the tides, from the harbor into the meadow. When it is shut, no water can flow between the meadow and the harbor in either direction.

Once the floor grates were in place and the aluminum sluice gate arrived from its manufacturer, the gate could be installed. The second photo shows the sluice gate as it was being lowered down into the gate chamber. Note that the workers are standing on the recently installed gate chamber floor grates. The second photo is a good picture of the whole gate assembly. The gate portion sits in a frame with tracks on each side that allow the gate to slide up and down in the frame. An overhead crane, not visible in this photo, is lifting the whole frame and gate assembly via a strap visible at the top of the photo. The frame will then be bolted against the inside wall of the concrete gate chamber. When the moving portion of the gate is in the down position, as it is in the picture, the gate will be shut and no water can leave through the six by ten foot hole in the wall of the gate chamber. When the gate is moved to its upper position, near the frame's horizontal top beam visible in the photo, water can freely exchange between the meadow and the harbor. Next week we will talk about what makes the gate move up and down and what triggers it to open or close.

A Brief Early Notice —The Commonwealth Office of Dam Safety has requested that the Town do some investigative work on the Bound Brook Dam in the Beechwood area. The dam is under Beechwood Street, just east of Mill Lane. The investigative work will require us to engage a heavy boring machine to take earth samples from the dam area. Due to the large size of this boring equipment, we will need to close Beechwood Street for the better part of one day. We will keep you posted as we decide on a date for this work. We are currently working on a plan for traffic and emergency services with the police, fire and DPW.

HEALTH NOTES

Friendship can be a healthy thing

STEVE BOBO

Friendship and Health Researchers are only now starting to pay attention to the nature of friendship and social networks in overall health. Defined as "a person whom one knows, likes, and trusts," the value that is found in friendships is often the result of a friend demonstrating the following on a consistent basis: The tendency to desire what is best for the other including sympathy, empathy, honesty, perhaps in situations where it may be difficult for others to speak the truth, especially in sometimes pointing out the perceived faults of one's presumed friend. Also important: mutual understanding and compassion; trust in one another; ability to express feelings without the fear judgment; sometimes emotional support; a relationship based on equal give and take between two parties.

In general, the role of friendship in our lives isn't terribly well appreciated," R.G. Adams, sociology professor at the North Carolina University: " Friendship has a bigger impact on our psychological well-being than family relationships." Bella DePaulo, a psychology professor at the University of California, whose work focuses on single people and friendships, notes that in many studies, friendship has an even greater effect on health than a spouse or family member. In the study of nurses with breast cancer, having a spouse wasn't associated with survival. Last year, researchers studied 34 students at the University of Virginia, taking them to the base of a steep hill and fitting them with a weighted backpack. They were then asked to estimate the steepness of the hill. Some participants stood next to friends during the exercise, while others were alone. The students who stood with friends gave lower estimates of the steepness of the hill. And the longer the friends had known each other, the less steep the hill appeared. "People with stronger friendship networks feel like there is someone they can turn to," said Karen A. Roberto, director, Center for Gerontology, Virginia Tech. "Friendship is an undervalued resource. The consistent message of these studies is that friends make your life better."

Many chronicles describe how friendships have shaped lives and continue to sustain them. An individual, quoted in a recent New York Times study said she was often more comfortable discussing her illness with her girlfriends than with her doctor. "We go so far back that these women will talk about anything," she said.

Friendship and association can be thought of as spanning the same continuum. The study of friendship is included in the fields of sociology, social psychology, anthropology, philosophy, and zoology. Various academic theories of friendship have been proposed, among which are social exchange theory, equity theory, relational dialectics, and attachment styles.

...friendship clearly has a profound psychological effect. People with strong friendships are less likely than others to get colds, perhaps because they have lower stress levels.

In 2006, a study of nearly 3,000 nurses with breast cancer found that women without close friends were four times as likely to die from the disease as women with 10 or more friends. And notably, proximity and the amount of contact with a friend wasn't associated with survival. Just having friends was protective.

While many friendship studies focus on relationships between women, the findings can benefit both genders. In a six-year study of 736 middle-age Swedish men, attachment to a single person didn't appear to affect risk of heart attack and fatal coronary heart disease, but having friendships did. Only smoking was as important a risk factor as lack of social support.

Americans are thought to be suffering a loss in the quality and quantity of close friendships since at least 1985. The study states 25 percent of Americans have no close confidants, and the average total number of confidants per citizen has dropped from four to two. According to the study: Americans' dependence on family as a safety net rose from 57 percent to 80 percent. Americans' dependence on a partner or spouse went up from 5 percent to 9 percent. A 10-year Australian study found that older people with a large circle of friends were 22 percent less likely to die during the study period than those with fewer friends

Exactly why friendship has such a big effect isn't entirely clear. While friends can provide concrete benefits like running errands and picking up medicine for a sick person, the benefits go well beyond physical assistance; indeed, proximity does not seem to be a factor. It may be that people with strong social ties also have better access to health services and care. Beyond that, however, friendship clearly has a profound psychological effect. People with strong friendships are less likely than others to get colds, perhaps because they have lower stress levels.

Friendship is a form of interpersonal relationship generally considered to be closer than association, although a range of degrees of intimacy exists in both friendships and associations. Value found in friendships is often the result of a friend demonstrating a tendency to desire what is best for the other with sympathy, empathy and honesty, perhaps in situations difficult for others to speak the truth, especially in terms of pointing out the perceived faults of one's counterpart.

Mutual understanding and compassion; trust in one another (able to express feelings - including in relation to the other's actions — without the fear of being judged); able to go to each other for emotional support and positive reciprocity — a relationship is also based on equal give and take between the two parties.

In recent times, it has been postulated modern American friendships have lost the force and importance they had in antiquity. Last year, Harvard researchers reported that strong social ties could promote brain health as we age. A personality is formed by those with whom one associates; it may take a while but eventually you'll recognize your true friends.

FOR THE RECORD

Lessons learned along the way

GREGORY MATHIS

Father's Day is fast approaching and as I flipped through the card choices this weekend, I found myself in a reflective mood.

I recently visited my parents, who now live in South Carolina, and was able to spend some quality time with my dad.

That wasn't always the case growing up. When I was very young, my father was in the Navy and overseas for nine months at a time during the Vietnam War. We moved to a new location about every three years and by the time I was 6 I really hadn't spent much time with him.

When our family finally settled in Massachusetts, he was busy with work and I was busy with other things. My teenage years were tough at times and I know I didn't do much to help our relationship.

But those years are far behind in the rear-view mirror and with time I've come to understand a lot more about him than I realized when I was growing up. We've become close friends over the years and some of the hard lessons learned back then make much more sense now.

Being a father myself, I know it's not always easy. I know I've made my share of mistakes along the way, but I also know how very rewarding parenthood can be.

Of the many milestones in my life, nothing can really compare to the day my daughter was born. My mother fondly recalls that day, walking into the hospital's maternity ward, anxiously anticipating greeting her first grandchild. What she found was her grown son, sitting in a rocking chair in the nursery, looking down at his daughter, blubbering like a baby himself.

I'm sure many parents are overcome with emotion the first time they see or hold their baby, but I could not control the wave of emotions that had taken me by storm at that particular moment.

When my daughter arrived all bundled up back at the nursery, the nurses went through their routine, measuring and weighing her, taking foot prints, cleaning her up a bit, and wrapping her in a nice, warm towel. Once she was wrapped up, one of the nurses handed her to me.

What do you want me to do?, I thought.

As she handed me my daughter, she motioned to a rocking chair in the corner of the room. I took my newborn into my arms and sat down and slowly began to rock. Was I holding her right? Was her head in the right position? Did she have all of her fingers and toes? Was her coloring good? The questions raced through my head like a tidal wave. I had so many questions, but wasn't sure of many of the answers.

All I needed to assure me that everything was all right was looking down and seeing her bright, blue eyes peering back at me. After anxiously waiting for nine months, Kira was here, in my arms, eyes wide open.

I have to say the gift I received more than 22 years ago when I became a father is one that continues to bring joy.

Happy Father's Day to all the dads reading this.

CSCR kick off meeting

Summer has slowly crept in and students involved with the Center for Student Coastal Research, CSCR, are excited to start the season with the annual CSCR Kick-Off event, Wednesday, June 22, 7 p.m., 40 Parker Avenue, Cohasset.

Local students and teachers are organizing their different research groups in preparation for the months ahead when they will be collecting and processing data from different locations throughout the community. CSCR has a wide range of research groups with students in varying grade levels. Groups at CSCR include wetland monitoring teams which are responsible for analyzing the health of nearby salt marshes such as Jacobs Meadow. Other studies include water quality projects in Cohasset Harbor and surrounding beaches. If you are interested in learning more about CSCR or thinking about joining a group, stop by the Kick-Off event on June 22.

Sidewalk Sale

Michael Gaillard of New York City browses through clothing on sale in front of Outside In while walking his dog, Charlie, on Saturday. He was in town for a wedding.

About a dozen of the retail businesses from Depot Court to North Main placed a selection of their discounted wares on the sidewalk last Saturday during their normal business hours.

"It's about creating a fun, relaxed, summery atmosphere in the village," said Paperscapes owner Beverly Bielewicz. "This is the time of year when there are tons of yard sales, so we figured why don't we do something similar?"

Participating businesses included: Ripley Road's All the Best and Wendy's Closet on Depot Court, Focus Gallery and Pink Tulip had tables on the building's farmer's porch. New businesses flower shop, Bumble Bee Landing, and Outside In with its outdoor athletic items got involved. Veteran village businesses on North Main, Fleming's, Darilynn's, Hernan's, Paperscapes, Ports & Co, and Twist were set to participate as well.

Volume 37 - Report No. 23 June 6-10, 2011

Representative Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) (617) 722-2120 Room 472

THE HOUSE AND SENATE: Beacon Hill Roll Call records the votes of local senators on three roll calls from the week of June 6-10. There were no roll calls in the House.

CHANGES TO STATE GOVERNMENT (S 1905)

Senate 38-0, approved and sent to the House a lengthy bill designed to make major changes in the way state government operates. The measure requires state government to regularly evaluate the worthiness, successes and failures of all agencies and programs. It would also establish a special commission to decide the fate of existing state agencies and boards based on their core missions and performance.

Another key provision would require the governor to file a zero-based budget every four years — one that starts from scratch and is not based on the prior year's funding.

The measure also requires unrestricted local aid to be distributed monthly rather than quarterly and caps the state's debt limit at $17.07 billion.

Supporters said this would modernize and reform the way state government operates. They argued it would get rid of the mentality that each department's budget should almost always be funded at the prior year's level, at minimum. They noted it would finally improve efficiency, transparency and accountability by implementing performance measurement requirements for all government agencies and programs.

(A "Yes" vote is for the bill.)

FUND PENSION LIABILITY WITH RAINY DAY FUND (S 1905)

Senate 32-5, approved an amendment that would use some of the money in the state's Rainy Day Fund to help reduce the state's unfunded pension liability. The bill provides that when annual capital gains revenue exceeds $1 billion, the excess would go to the state's Rainy Day Fund. The amendment provides that 5 percent of the revenue go to fund the state's pension liability.

Amendment supporters said when tax revenues are robust, the state can afford to increase payments to fund the multi-billion unfunded pension liability.

Amendment opponents noted that once the Rainy Day Fund reaches a certain amount, some of it automatically goes into the Tax Reduction Fund and eventually goes back to taxpayers as a tax cut. They said diverting some of the Rainy Day Fund's revenue to pay down pension liability would delay tax cuts.

(A "Yes" vote is for the amendment that would divert some of the Rainy Day Fund money to pay down pension liability. A "No" vote is against the diversion.)

ZERO-BASED BUDGETING (S 1905)

Senate 38-0, approved an amendment that would require the governor to file a zero-based budget every four years, starting with fiscal year 2017. A zero-based budget is one that develops a budget for every state department and agency from scratch rather than being based on the prior year's funding. The budget would also be required to include a brief description of the tasks and goals for each agency or department.

Amendment supporters said this would be a major step forward by ensuring items in the budget are evaluated based on their importance, performance and merit rather than on the prior year's funding.

(A "Yes" vote is for the amendment.)

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

3 PERCENT PAY HIKES - Gov. Deval Patrick authorized executive branch departments and agencies to give some 4,000 managers up to a 3 percent raise in fiscal 2012. Secretary of Administration and Finance Jay Gonzalez estimated the hikes could cost the state up to $10 million. He noted the state does not have plans to provide additional money to fund the hikes, and departments and agencies would have to absorb the costs within their existing budgets.

Supporters say these managers have not had a raise since 2007 and also took unpaid furloughs in fiscal 2009 and 2010.

Critics say a salary hike is outrageous when unemployment is high and important human service state programs and local aid have been cut.

PROHIBIT TRANSGENDER DISCRIMINATION (H 502) - The Judiciary Committee heard testimony on a bill that would prohibit discrimination against transgender persons by adding gender identity protection to the state's non-discrimination and hate crimes laws.

Supporters say Massachusetts should join 12 other states that have laws banning discrimination against transgender persons in many areas including employment, housing, credit, public accommodations and public education.

Opponents say the bill would put women and children at risk by allowing dangerous male predators, claiming to be transgender persons, to use women's bathrooms.

Gov. Patrick in February quietly signed a narrower executive order that prohibits all state agencies from making employment decisions based on gender identity. The measure took effect immediately and was designed to protect transgender persons from discrimination when applying for a state job.

TAPE BOOKING OF SUSPECTS (H 1374) - The Judiciary Committee's hearing also included a bill that would require the Secretary of Public Safety and Security to adopt regulations requiring the video or digital recording of the statements made by all parties participating in the booking process of any person arrested by a state police officer.

PUNISH SANCTUARY CITIES AND TOWNS (H 1563) - The Committee on Public Safety and Homeland Security held a hearing on legislation that would withhold local aid from any cities or towns that do not enforce federal immigration laws. The withholding would also apply to communities that have established themselves as "sanctuary cities or towns" that offer protection in a variety of ways to illegal immigrants.

FAMOUS BIRTHDAYS

Panama Canal: Part II

MARY KENNEDY

In a speech to Congress in 1902, President Roosevelt said of the proposed Panama Canal project: "No single great material work which remains to be undertaken on this continent is as of such consequence to the American people."

And yet, the first year (1904) of the American "Big Ditch" project was not promising. Problems included excessive heat, food spoilage, poor sanitation, mudslides and malaria. In less than a year, three out of four American workers had opted out, and the cost had spiraled to $128,000,000.

Enter Dr. William Gorgas to oversee what became one of the greatest sanitation campaigns in history. Under his command swamps and ditches were drained, and pesticides sprayed by the ton. The deadly diseases were finally controlled – and nearly eradicated. After the resignation of John Stevens, Army Major George Goethals, directed the building of three sets of locks. The mighty Chagres River was finally damned, creating Lake Gatun, at 85 feet above sea level, the second-largest artificial lake in the world.

In November 1906 Theodore Roosevelt became the first president to visit a foreign nation. At the work site, he posed at the controls of a huge shovel and later thanked the American workers for their construction efforts: "The country is placed under obligation to you, just as it is to a soldier in a great war...This is one of the great works of the world. It is a greater work than you yourselves at the moment realize." (Ample evidence has proven him right. The Panama and Suez canals are the only two strategically important artificial waterways in the world – shortening routes, connecting continents).

The Panama Canal officially opened in August 1914, but the outbreak of World War I postponed all grand celebrations. The final cost, $375,000,000, made it at that time the single most expensive construction project in U.S. history. More astonishingly, however, it was some $23,000,000 below the original budget estimate! Might that be because Roosevelt had decided the work should be carried out by contractors and army engineers rather than the U.S. government?

Today, some 15,000 ships a year "idle" through the canal for about 10 hours, guided by electricity-powered "mules" attached to the ship with steel cables. The cost of passage is computed by weight. In August 1928, American adventurer, author and lecturer, Richard Halliburton, swam the entire length of the canal from the Caribbean to the Pacific. It took eight days and cost him – at 150 pounds – just 36 cents. In 2008, the Disney Magic paid $331,200.

In 1978 President Jimmy Carter decided to relinquish control of the canal area. Controversy filled the news in both countries. Many Americans feared that China would become the canal's "gatekeeper." (Panama had awarded management of two canal ports to a Hong Kong-based conglomerate.) Protesters dumped a 4-foot high pile of 250,000 petitions outside the Capitol in Washington, DC. The editor and publisher of one Panamanian newspaper wrote that the turnover was like "suddenly inheriting a vast estate – but no money to manage it with."

On December 14, 1999, Jimmy Carter handed over the transfer document to Panama's first female president, Mireya Moscoo, saying, "It's yours." Six years later, U.S. Ambassador to Panama, Linda Watt, said that the canal operation under Panama control was "outstanding" and the "international shipping community is quite pleased."

The Panama Canal Authority continues to modernize its operations: New lighting system to increase safety, new track and turntable system to cut transit times. In 2006 Panama's citizens voted to expand the canal. The project will double the capacity of the Panama Canal by allowing more transits and larger ships.

Watch for its completion in 2014, one hundred years after the first American shovel began the "Big Ditch" dig.

Mary Kennedy lives in Cohasset, teaches at Suffolk University, and travels whenever she can.

"I'm really looking forward to hitting the ground running and being part of the town."

Coughlin said he planned to attend this weekend's Arts Festival and enjoy one of the famous lobster rolls and some strawberry shortcake. He said he plans to move to Cohasset as soon as possible.

One of the things he is most excited about is the fact the town has both a new Town Manager and new School Superintendent coming on at the same time.

"It offers a unique opportunity to forge a town-wide team concept. I'm looking forward to working with the Board of Selectmen and other committees," Coughlin said.

During their deliberation Monday night, Coughlin was lauded for his consensus building style and creative approaches to issues. Selectmen Carlson, chair Ted Carr, Diane Kennedy, and Leland Jenkins all said they were leaning towards Coughlin – albeit in only a 52/48-split kind of way.

"He brings a lot of really creative ideas and energy to the table. Both candidates are very different people," Carr said, who asked that the selectmen try to make a unanimous decision on a candidate. "It just sends a good signal because we have to work with the new town manager."

Jenkins said he got the feeling Coughlin was someone who would "hit the ground running" and that was something the town needed.

Carlson liked the fact he was utilizing a committee similar to the Budget Planning Group in Westport and previous posts, as well as his "cabinet-style management method" with department heads.

Kennedy said she had gone back and forth on the candidates over the weekend.

"Cohasset needs someone that is going to come out of the office and engage as many people as possible," Kennedy said, and she felt Coughlin was the candidate who would do that.

Selectmen Fred Koed expressed some concern about Coughlin's financial management and knowledge, which was a skill the town needed in a new town manager.

"I think (McAuliffe) has some strengths in that," Koed said. McAuliffe worked as an accountant for the Department of Revenue for a time in his early career.

The other Selectmen agreed finance was one of McAuliffe's strong suits, yet they did not feel it was enough to put him ahead of Coughlin.

Carr pointed to Coughlin's unique strength of being a town administrator in Westport, a coastal town with a similar mix of people to Cohasset.

The Selectmen voted unanimously to offer the position to Coughlin, pending satisfactory negotiations.

A subcommittee comprised of Carr and Jenkins, with help from the town's search consultant Thomas Groux, will negotiate the contract. They hoped to bring something back to the board on Tuesday, June 21.

"I think we got great candidates (for this position) and I think we'll be very well served," Carr said. He commended both the town manager screening committee and McAuliffe for being part of the process.

Bill Griffin, who served as Town Manager for five years, retired in October to take a job in the private sector. Interim Town Manager Steve Lombard has led the town through the last eight months and the fiscal 2012 budget but can only stay until the end of the month.

About Michael Coughlin

Michael Coughlin is the current Town Administrator in Westport, Mass. and has been there since 2007. He previously held the position of Town Manager in Northbridge and Southbridge, Mass. Before moving into municipal management he was a private practice attorney and assistant district attorney in Worcester. Coughlin served as a captain in the US Army as a Judge Advocate General. Skippers win second straight State Title

By William Wassersug
wwassersug@wickedlocal.com

It started with an idea and ended with a Twizzler.

Yes the red licorice candy, the one that can easily be a much tastier and safer alternative to a victory cigar.

The Cohasset baseball team celebrated last night with Twizzlers and medals after bringing the aforementioned idea to fruition with a hard-fought 6-1 win over Georgetown in the Div. 4 State Championship game at Lynn's Fraser Field.

The idea of course, was to win a second straight State Title on the same field they won it last yar.

"We set a goal to win (another title) at the beginning of the season," Cohasset shortstop Anders Goetz said. "This is an unbelievable feeling. It's more unbelievable than I thought it would feel like. At the beginning of the season we set the goal and knew we'd accept nothing less. This feels ten times better than last year."

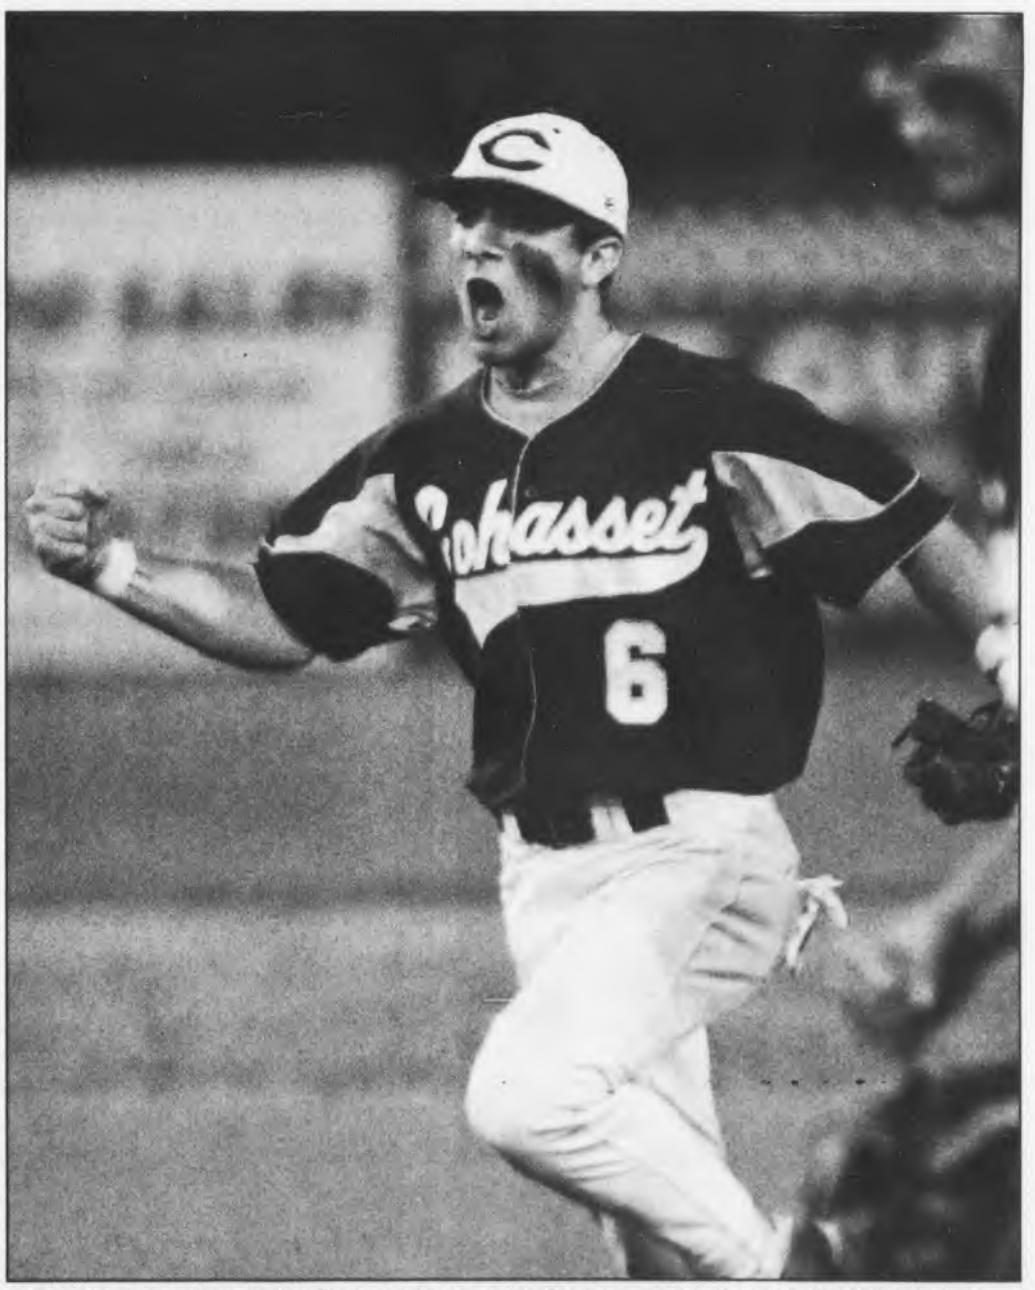
Goetz ended up as one of the game's big heroes among several, while atoning for one mistake in a big way.

In the second inning, a throwing error by Goetz allowed Georgetown's Will Ingraham to score what eventually became the Royals' only run.

For a while, it looked like it might hold up and Georgetown pitcher Ryan Browner kept the Skippers off the board through four innings.

But Cohasset is a quick strike team, and they struck in the fifth with a little help.

Shane Haggerty led off the inning with a single. Goetz walked and both advanced on a sacrifice bunt by Jeff Cavanaro.



Jamie Faber, who was also brilliant on the mound, notching the complete game victory, walked to load the bases and two runs came in when Georgetown's second baseman threw off target to the plate trying for a force.

Faber had similar trouble in the top of the fifth when he loaded the bases on two walks and a bunt he bobbled with nobody out.

Trailing 1-0, one hit could have opened things up for the Royals.

Instead, Faber bore down and induced a pair of grounders to third.

GOLF NOTES

All Marshfield CC eyes will be on Sisk

PAUL HARBER

You can bet the crowd at the Marshfield Country Club will be watching the wide screen, rooting for Geoff Sisk, who honed his skills on this terrific Stiles and van Kleek layout, during this week's U.S. Open.

Ironically, Sisk wasn't even going to try to qualify for the U.S. Open this year.

That is, until he received an email from the U.S. Golf Association informing him he did not have to play in a local qualifier because he was 50th among Nationwide Tour's money leaders last year.

So, for the first time since 2007, he entered the National Open and selected Canoe Brook in New Jersey for his sectional qualifying site.

Sisk not only qualified last Monday, he earned medalist honors.

He's familiar with Canoe Brook. All six times he qualified for the U.S. Open, he did it at the New Jersey club. Canoe Brook suits his game and he knows how to play it. It is one of those old, tight courses that require more precision than power. It's extremely rare for anyone to shoot in the low 60s.

"It's not thinking you have to shoot a low score," Sisk, 46, told reporters after shooting his 6-under 137. "Canoe Brook is one of my favorite golf courses to play in the country. It's in great shape. It's a great layout. I just like the way it suits my eye. It's one of those [layouts] you don't have to shoot a low score," offered Sisk.

In the morning round Sisk fashioned a 1-under 70 on the easier South course. After lunch, his game came to life on the more difficult North course, where Sisk chipped in for birdie at the par-4 first, reached the par-5 second in two (two-putt birdie) and added birdies at Nos. 4, 6 and 7 before finishing the side with a bogey-5 at nine. His lone birdie on the inward nine came at 16 for a solid 67, the day's best round on the North Course.

"The mindset you have to have on these two courses is take advantage of some holes, be careful on some others and just play good golf," said Sisk, whose best finish in 2011 has been a tie for 11th in Bogota, Colombia.

"It's all about getting in," Sisk summed it up. "That's all that matters, getting into [the U.S. Open]."

Father's Day Special?

Pleasant Valley CC head professional Paul Parajeckas and his son Jason won the New England PGA's Pro-Assistant Championship at the Bay Club at Mattapoisett for the second year in a row. After shooting 66-68, Team Parajeckas birdied the first playoff hole — Jason holing an 8-footer after recovering from a fairway bunker — to beat the Ipswich Country Club duo of Travis Hall and Daniel Dwyer. It was a nice Father's Day present. Among locals in the hunt for the title were Mark Gammons and Beth O'Kelly of Black Rock CC of Hingham, who were 3 strokes back at 5-under. Richard Baptist and Joe Ferreira of White Cliffs and the team of Todd Cook and Jordon Knickerbocker of Milton Hoosic were at 3-under, Tom Cavicchi and TJ Valentine of the Harmon Club of Rockland and Stephen Clancy and Robert Iannarone of Granite Links of Quincy, both at 2-under; John Connelly and Aaron Ungvarsky of Cohasset and Tom Rooney and Art Cahill of Lebaron Hills of Lakeville at 1-under, and Steve Demmer and Dick Fagan of The Kittansett Club of Marion at even par.

State Am qualifiers

When they hold the State Amateur next month at Wyantenuck CC in Great Barrington, Andrew Harvey of Old Scotland, Matt Sebet of Norfolk GC, Steve Burak of Thorny Lea, will be on hand. They earned their way into the tournament. They were among 15 qualifiers at Kernwood CC in Salem last Thursday. . . Meanwhile at a State Amateur qualifier at Fall River CC, Jamie Griffiths of Pine Oaks, James Magner of Plymouth, Mark Metcalf, Scott Congdon and Matt Degiorgio of Foxborough CC, Christopher Tarallo, Richard Ellis, and Ray Richard of Thorny Lea, Brien Tolland of Sharon, and Eric Daniel of Presidents GC, qualified. . . Bob Drury fashioned a 74 at Braintree Municipal to win low gross at a Boston Amateur Golf Society tournament last week . . . Low gross winners at the Norfolk County Women's Classic, held at Presidents Golf Course in Quincy, were Marcie Arnold and Chris Fitzpatrick (Division 1), Karen Ryan and Kim McDowell (Division 2), and Sandra Jordan and Carol Cahill (Division 3) . . . A round of applause to Joanna and Stephanie Katsos, daughters of Blue Hill CC head pro Lou Katsos, who were awarded 2011 PGA of America Scholarships.

Ray Richard knows how to golf in all sorts of weather. Here he is at State Four-Ball earlier this year.

Ray Richard has been one of the top amateurs in Massachusetts over the last 30 years, having come close to winning the State Amateur championship several times.

He has qualified for match play numerous times, been a quarterfinalist three times and a finalist once, losing to James McDermott at Worcester CC in 1989. Last week he teamed with Kevin Carey of Dennis Pines to win the prestigious State Senior Four-Ball Championship on Cape Cod.

Few people know it, but Richard was a championship bowler as a youngster, appearing on Channel 5's Saturday afternoon bowling show numerous times. He didn't win money for his efforts. They gave him candy bars.

Handicap 0.1

What's been your lowest handicap: I was a plus handicap in my prime.

How and when did you start playing golf: I was 13 years old and wanted to be a baseball player. A good friend, Tommy Linde, got me to go out and play with him at Cedar Hill in Stoughton. I shot a 167 for 18 holes and teed it up everywhere.

Best scoring round: In competition, it was a 66 at Duxbury Yacht Club in a U.S. Amateur qualifier. In an informal ground with friends, I've shot a 64 and a 65 at Thorny Lea GC.

Most memorable round: I think it was at the U.S. Senior Amateur qualifier at Tedesco in Marblehead. I shot 72 to qualify in 2008.

Favorite golf course you played: Hyannisport. It's a fun course, it's always in great condition and you have to play your best game. Furthermore, it changes all the time, even during the same round.

Golf course you want to play before you die: Have to think about that one. Pebble Beach maybe, or Augusta National. I walked Augusta during the Masters and I'd love to play it.

Favorite foursome, living or deceased: That's a tough one. Of course I'd want [former State Am champion] Johnny Hadges. He's a great friend and we played so much golf together. The other two, how about Jack Nicklaus and Arnold Palmer?

Best advice you ever got about playing golf: Years ago golf was like a second job to me and I was too serious about it. And somebody told me to, "keep it a game," and since then I've played better and it has been more fun.

TITLE

Cavanaro handled both shots cleanly and made perfect throws to Connor Goetz at the plate, followed by a routine grounder to second.

"That was all my fault," Faber said. "I put the team in a bad spot. I knew I had to get us out of it. I have confidence in my fielders. I knew if I let them hit the ball they'd make the plays."

As for a championship, Faber didn't know what to say.

"I don't know how to explain it," he said. "It's unbelievable. I felt it last year, but I wasn't the pitcher. I really can't explain the feeling."

Faber said he had confidence in his team, and that he was rested and ready.

"The offense has been scoring early," he said. "The first two games of the playoffs were easy. Friday we were up 13, so I came out. I was rested well."

Cohasset broke the game open in the bottom of the fifth.

As Browner, already worn down from a long fourth inning, hit John Collins with a one-out pitch.

Shane Haggerty followed with a singe and Anders Goetz and Jeff Cavanaro followed with doubles, bringing in three runs.

An error led to a fourth, and the Skippers had a 6-1 lead to take into the seventh.

Faber had three pitches going, and they were all working.

The final number had Faber allowing just 3 hits and 1 unearned run. He struck out 6 and walked 3.

Goetz wasn't going to let the game get away because of his error.

"I knew I made a mistake," he said. "So I had to pick up the team and put it behind. Faber was just unbelievable. He beared down and got it done. This was a complete team win. Everyone on the team earned it."

Coach Pete Afanasiw agred.

"I'm so proud of these guys," he said. "They worked for this. They deserve all the accolades they get. They've earned them."

Coming into the game, Afanasiw had no idea what to expect outside the fact that Georgetown was a 6-14 team that ran of a bunch of victories come tournament time.

Afanasiw was impressed with what he saw.

"They're the best 6-14 team I've ever seen," he said. "Their pitcher was phenomenal. I give them a lot of credit."

Afanasiw smiled when asked about the late innings, where he had a lead and fresh arms in the pen if they were needed.

"It was nice to have a cushion," he said. "It made it a little easier."

COLLEGE FAIR

Tuesday, June 21, 2011, 6 to 8 p.m. • Regis College, 235 Wellesley St., Weston, MA

EVENT HOSTED BY: Regis College · WICKED LOCAL.com · GateHouse Media New England

Tips for attending college fair at Regis College

By Wanda E. Suriel
Director of Admission,
Regis College

Are you ready to take a ride into the college search process? On Tuesday, June 21 from 6 to 8 p.m., WickedLocal.com and GateHouse Media New England are sponsoring a College Fair at Regis College, 235 Wellesley St., Weston.

At the college fair, representatives will be ready to answer questions pertaining to their institutions. Visit media.wickedlocal.com/collegefair2011 for a list of exhibitors at the College Fair.

Now, if you have never navigated a college fair, be prepare to connect, engage in conversation and walk away with more information than you ever imagined. Attending a college fair is your opportunity to interview a college or university and do a preliminary evaluation of an institution's fit for you.

The objective of a college fair is to allow students and parents the opportunity to gain additional information. It is encouraged for students and families to come prepared. Here are a few tips:

Have a plan of action! Research colleges and universities you are interested in connecting with before arriving. Visit them during the fair to ask your specific questions. Be sure to save time for schools you may have never heard of. There are many different types of institutions, so it may be most beneficial to be open-minded. Some examples: what type of campus, large or small; what type of institution, public or private; geographic location, in state or out of state? The opportunities are endless. Find out what your best fit is.

Think about the five most important factors for you — and it's OK to think outside the box. It's not always about GPAs and SATs, but searching for qualities that are associated with your interests.

Parents, let your son/daughter be in the driver's seat. Recommendations are highly encouraged but let them begin to take ownership of their destination. Your son/daughter may want to walk around and talk to college representative on their own.

Be calm. College representatives are very personable and are more than willing to help you navigate this college search process.

Advance preparation saves time. Make labels with your demographic information, which you can adhere to any institution's inquiry card. Labels should include: first and last name, address, city, state, zip, telephone number, email address, gender, date of birth, current high school/college you attend, year of high school graduation, academic and or athletic interest(s). Be sure to create a professional email address which would encompass a combination of your first and last name i.e. J.Smith@gmail.com; Jsmith12@aol.com.

Don't forget to bring a pen and paper/notebook with you so you can take notes on the different colleges. You don't want them to all blur together at the end of the evening. Consider bringing a bag for all of the materials you will be collecting in case the fair does not provide one.

Make sure you wear comfortable shoes and clothing. You will be walking, standing and talking.

At the end of the college fair think collectively about the information you have gathered. Follow up with schools that meet your interest or if you have more questions, email the representative you met at the college fair. If possible, connect with a student at the institution, discuss your interested colleges and universities with your parents and secondary school counselor, arrange a campus visit and attend an open house or information session.

Keep in mind a college fair is just one of the many ways to conduct your college search. Enjoy the ride!

Wanda E. Suriel is director of admission at Regis College in Weston.

Applying for financial aid starts with an important step

By Pamela M. Gilligan
Director of Financial Aid.
Regis College

The process of applying for financial aid has often been compared to the dreaded process of filing your income tax return but it can actually be easier than you think.

The U.S. Department of Education created the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) – notice the word "free" – that parents and students use to apply for federal, state and college aid. This one form can be used by all types of student – dependent students, independent students, graduate students and part-time students – at all types of post-secondary institutions (four-year public or private colleges/universities, proprietary schools, trade schools and distance learning, too).

Although the FAFSA is available in several formats, most students/families file the form online at www.fafsa.gov as it is much faster and has a lot of online guidance to help students and families complete the form.

The FAFSA has several sections of questions to complete which will give a financial snapshot of the family's income using data, family composition and, in some cases, assets. The student also enters school codes to identify which colleges the student wishes to receive the FAFSA results as part of applying for financial aid. For faster processing, the FAFSA can be signed electronically with a personal identification number (PIN).

After the FAFSA is submitted to the Central Processor, a Student Aid Report (SAR) is sent to the student applicant (by email, if an email address is provided, or U.S. mail) and the colleges listed on the FAFSA will receive the processed data in an electronic format. The SAR has a comment section, lists the schools that received the FAFSA information, and calculates the Expected Family Contribution (EFC). The EFC is the amount that the FAFSA calculations determine a family can pay or finance for a year of education, and assists each of the colleges to determine how much and what types of financial aid each can offer to a student to allow him or her to enroll at that college.

Each year the FAFSA is available to file as of Jan. 1, and can be completed all the way through June 30 of the following year. So, you can file a 2011-12 FAFSA any time from Jan. 1, 2011 through June 30, 2012, although the earlier you apply the better your chance to receive financial assistance from the college of your choice.

Helpful hints for families, students:

Dos:
- Do read college application materials to know deadline dates and if the college requires an institutional financial aid form and/or CSS Profile form
- Do apply on time to maximize your chances for assistance
- Do apply online and sign with PIN, both student and parent
- Do use estimated tax return information to meet deadline if your taxes are not filed
- Do check for accuracy
- Do read the comment section on the Student Aid Report (SAR)
- Do use the Federal Student Aid help online or call 800-433-3243
- Do call your college's financial aid office if you have questions
- Do apply every year that you want to receive financial aid

Don'ts:
- Don't pay to process your FAFSA – www.fafsa.gov is a free service
- Don't wait until you have filed your taxes, use estimated amounts on FAFSA
- Don't forget to sign the FAFSA before it is submitted
- Don't give your PIN number to anyone, protect it like your Social Security number
- Don't forget to apply for outside scholarships in your community or online
- Don't pay any scholarship search service to find outside scholarships; www.fastweb.com and www.finaid.org are just two legitimate, free services

LIFE AT CHS

Down the homestretch!

OLIVIA FRANKLIN

Hello Cohasset! Finally, the last full week of school is finished, and now we just have to make it through four more days! Actually, three and a half, because we're getting out at 10:30 a.m. on Thursday the 23rd...I'm pretty sure the majority of the recently graduated seniors will still be asleep while we're all rushing out of the doors of CHS, ready to take on summer. For us new "seniors", the last week of school means three whole lunch periods in the upper lobby, marking the first time we'll enjoy a uniquely senior privilege. For everyone else, have fun in the caf!

This past weekend was disappointingly cold. Why is it that it was unbearably hot when we're all stuck in school and then unnaturally cold when we have time to spend outside? Go figure. The weekend brought some relaxation, and a few more graduation parties. I seriously cannot go to another grad party because I've already consumed my bodyweight in food...

Now for an update on Cohasset spring sports teams. Last Friday, the boy's lacrosse team lost a close game (12-10) in the state semifinals. Despite the loss, you had an amazing season boys, congrats! Baseball was supposed to play last Thursday, but their semifinal game was repeatedly postponed. Finally, they got the chance to play on Tuesday in Rockland, and won against 2-0 against West Bridgewater. On to the finals! (See this week's sports for the awesome news!)

Results of last Friday's student council election were announced on Monday during lunch. Congrats to all of the elected officers, I'm excited to see what projects will be worked on next year!

Friday was supposed to be our last day of school, but that doesn't seem to stop teachers from continuing to assign work for next week. Does anybody like snow days now? I'm going to go ahead and say no...Looking on the bright side, at least the high school doesn't have to stay in school until it's almost July (sorry Joseph Osgood...). Hang in there and focus on your last few assignments, essays, and finals CHS, it'll all be worth it in the end!

As for this weekend, enjoy the annual Strawberry Festival on the common, look at all of the glorious artwork and artisan's stands, eat strawberry shortcake, fried dough, and sip on some lemonade, spend time with all of your wonderful fathers on Sunday, and rest easy knowing that in six days, summer, which we all have been so desperately craving, will have finally arrived!

It may have been over 50 years ago now, but Sarah deLima will never forget her first experience with "My Fair Lady." And with good reason, since the longtime Cohasset resident, who is featured as Mrs. Higgins in the current North Shore Music Theatre production of the show, saw the musical in London with its now legendary original cast.

"I was 10 years old and it was my first West End show. I can still remember seeing Julie Andrews as Eliza Doolittle, the flower girl in her Cockney hat, and Rex Harrison as Henry Higgins, the professor who wants to make Eliza into a well-spoken lady. My parents took us to the theater and the ballet very often, from the time we were just young children," recalled the popular Boston area performer who was raised in India and the U.K. by missionary parents, by telephone last week. "I was a little girl, but I think even then I could appreciate that Julie Andrews had grace and luminosity. I thought she was marvelous then and I still do."

Over the years, South Shore and Boston audiences have found much to like about deLima, too, in a range of roles from Emmy in "The Doctor's Dilemna" at the American Repertory Theatre and Joanne in Stephen Sondheim's "Company" at Norwell's Company Theatre, to Big Edie Beale in "Grey Gardens" at Boston's Lyric Stage. Having previously appeared in NSMT's "La Cage aux Folles" in 1996, deLima is happy to be back in Beverly, this time playing Henry Higgins's socialite mother, a role she clearly enjoys.

"Mrs. Higgins is exactly who I would really like to be. She's effortlessly classy and commanding, but she also is a very warm person with a twinkle in her eye. Mrs. Higgins is very aware of her formidable nature and of her stature, too, but she still manages to be both substantive and unpretentious. She knows her son very well and she is not afraid to tell him when she disagrees with what he is doing. When all is said and done, Mrs. Higgins is an elegant and classy creature who wears some truly beautiful costumes. How could I not want to be her?" says deLima with a laugh.

Also helping deLima enjoy her current assignment are fellow cast members Charles O'Shaughnessy, as Henry Higgins, and Lisa O'Hare, who plays Eliza Doolittle. O'Shaughnessy is a television favorite from "The Nanny" and "Days of Our Lives," and O'Hare first portrayed Eliza in the recent national tour of "My Fair Lady" that played the Boston Opera House.

"When you work with a star, you're never entirely sure what to expect. We just spent a week rehearsing in New York, however, and Charles was a complete professional and a true gentleman. He's also terrific on stage, bringing just the right amount of irascible chauvinism to Henry while also managing to make him likeable. I also love Lisa who is our Eliza. She has a beautiful singing voice and she projects joy on stage. And, she is lovely and charming off stage."

Based on George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion" and set in Edwardian London – with book and lyrics by Alan Jay Lerner, music by Frederick Loewe, and a song list that includes "I Could Have Danced All Night" and "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face" – "My Fair Lady" has been a hit with audiences since it first opened on Broadway in February 1956, beginning a Tony Award-winning, then-record run of 2,717 performances. A London production, also starring Harrison and Andrews, opened two years later. A George Cukor-directed 1964 feature film version of the musical earned eight Academy Awards including Best Picture, Best Director and Best Actor for Rex Harrison who recreated his role as Henry Higgins, the arrogant and misogynistic phonetics professor who thinks that a person's accent determines his or her place in society. It has since been revived on Broadway in 1976, 1981, and 1993. A 2001 London revival spawned the U.S. national tour that played Boston three years ago. According to deLima, understanding the show's enduring popularity is easy.

"'My Fair Lady' has a great book based on a wonderful story, and it has songs that are absolutely beautiful. It has it all really."

Bill Hanney will present "My Fair Lady" at North Shore Music Theatre, 62 Dunham Road, Beverly, through June 19. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 978-232-7200 or go online at nsmt.org.

Lindsey Kimball of Ayer, a two time cancer survivor and straight A student, leads off the 2011 PMC Hingham Kids Ride 4 Cancer.

Record-breaking

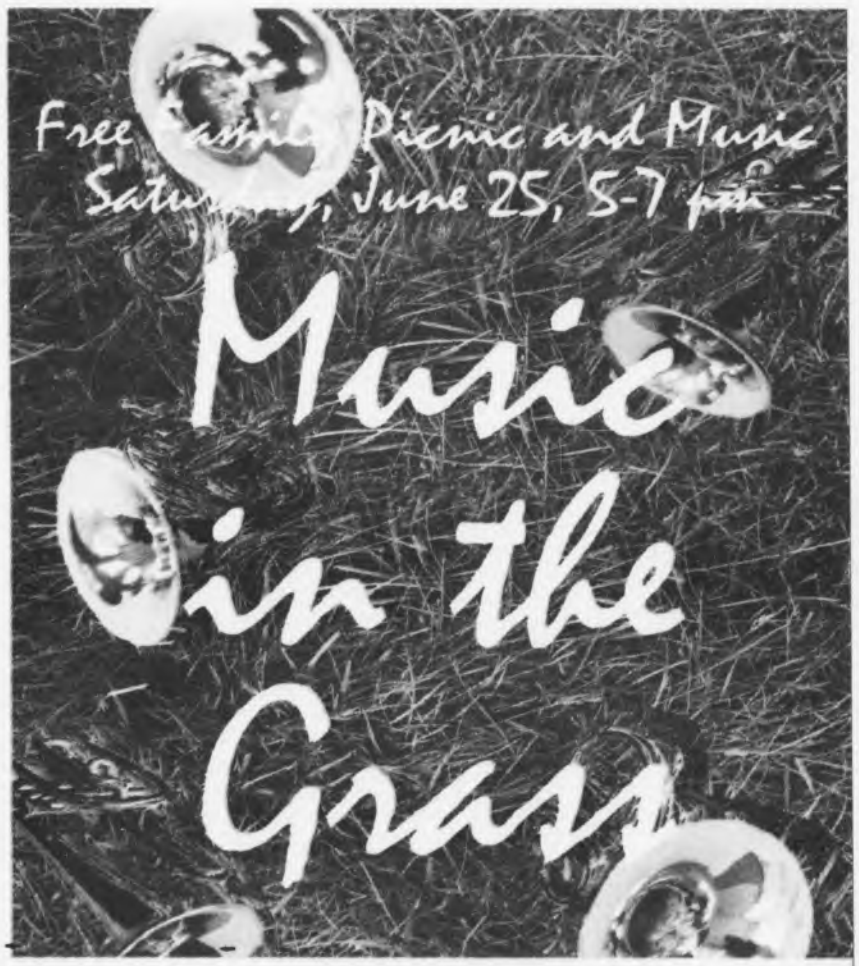
PMC Hingham Kids Ride biggest yet

Sunday's wet, cool weather couldn't dampen the spirits of the over 400 kids who turned up at Wompatuck State Park for the 2011 Pan-Massachusetts Challenge (PMC) Hingham Kids Ride and raised over $50,000 for the Jimmy Fund at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston.

It was a day filled with energy and emotion. "Energy" – as riders from 32 towns converged on the Park and prepared to pedal one of the five designated routes; and "Emotion" – as cancer survivors, Lindsey Campbell, 16-year-old Ayer sophomore and PMC rider, and Lynnette Irons, third-grade teacher at the Martinson Elementary School in Marshfield, spoke of their personal experiences and thanked the respectful crowd for their support and participation in the event. Following the speakers, Sage Warner of Hingham led the audience in the "Star Spangled Banner," spurring a rousing cheer from the crowd and a boisterous start to the ride.

The day did not end at the finish line. Participants and their families were treated to free ice cream from Brigham's of Hingham Square, refreshments from Stop & Shop, face painting, creative balloon animals, a magic show, hip hop dance lessons by the Weymouth Club, an inflatable slide, moonwalk and raffle drawings for a variety of exciting prizes. Everyone's spirit was kept high with the help of the live entertainment provided by Mike FM 93.7.

The PMC Hingham Kids Ride was truly a record-breaking event, with more money raised, more riders registered, and more volunteers recruited than ever before. Over $50,000 dollars has been raised so far, and donations will continue to be collected through December.



The PMC Hingham Kids Ride is an outgrowth of the 192-mile, two-day, bike-a-thon from Sturbridge to Provincetown PMC adult ride, which was started 32 years ago. Since its inception, the PMC has contributed more than $300 million to the fight against cancer. All proceeds raised by both events go to the Jimmy Fund at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston.

The PMC Hingham Kids Ride was truly a record-breaking event, with more money raised, more riders registered, and more volunteers recruited than ever before.

To send an e-gift to your favorite rider, go to pmc.org and "search for a rider" or send a check made out to "PMC" and send to PMC Hingham Kids Ride, P.O. Box 606, Hingham, MA 02043. And everyone is encouraged to consider riding or volunteering in next year's event. For more information, go to pmchingham@comcast.net.

SALOME'S STARS FOR RELEASE WEEK OF JUNE 27, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You feel ready to face up to a major change, although it might involve some risks. A once-dubious family member comes around and offers support and encouragement.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Move forward with your plans, despite discouraging words from those who underestimate the Bovine's strong will. Your keen instincts will guide you well.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) A misunderstanding is easily cleared up. Then go ahead and enjoy some fun and games this week. A Libra might have ideas that merit serious consideration for the future.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) You might feel as if you're in an emotional pressure cooker, but the situation is about to change in your favor. Take time out for some well-earned fun.

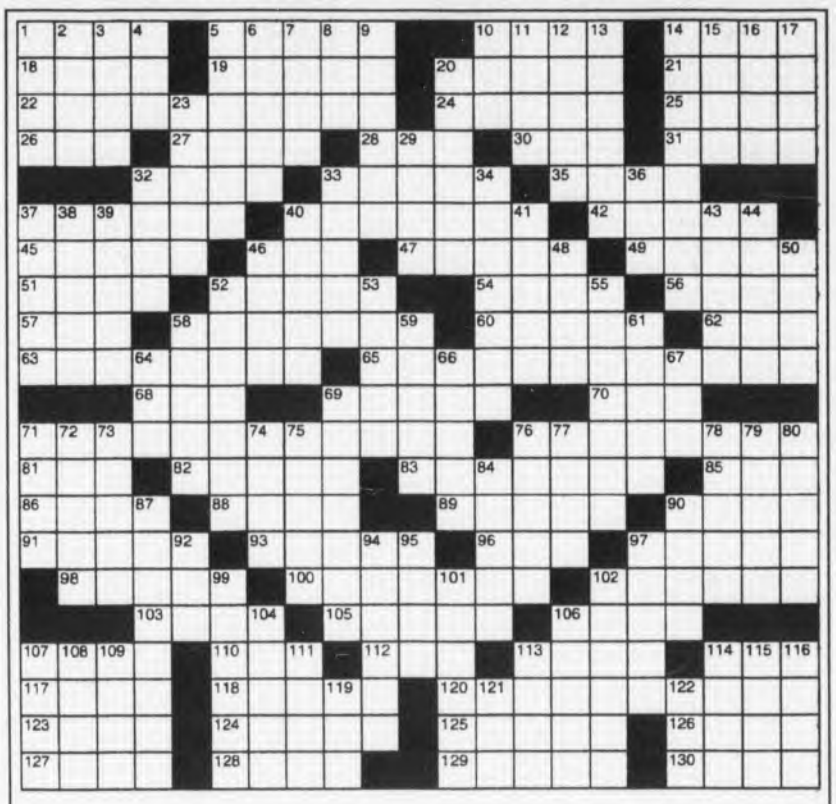
LEO (July 23 to August 22) A shift in your workplace responsibilities creates resentment among some co-workers. Deal with it before it becomes a threat to your success on the job.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Expect some surprises in what you thought was one of your typically well-planned schedules. Deal with them, and then enjoy some lighthearted entertainment.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Be careful: What appears to be a solid financial opportunity might have some hidden risks attached. A hazy personal matter needs to be cleared up.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) It's a good time to strengthen ties with family and friends. You might feel unsure about a recent workplace decision, but time will prove you did the right thing.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Just when you thought your relationship was comfortable and even predictable, your partner or spouse could spring a potentially life-changing surprise on you.



CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Your usually generous self is overshadowed by your equally strong suspicious nature. You might be judging things too harshly. Keep an open mind.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Love and romance dominate the week. Married Aquarians enjoy domestic harmony, while singles could soon be welcoming overtures from loving Leos.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) An old health problem recurs, but it is soon dealt with, leaving you eager to get back into the swing of things. A favorable

BORN THIS WEEK: You have an independent spirit that resists being told what to do. But you're also wise enough to appreciate good advice.

Level: Hoo Boy!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

ART EVENT SATURDAY

Old Ship painting to be unveiled

Depicts meetinghouse from early days

By Constance Gorfinkle
Special to the Mariner

The painting is a harbor scene whose foreground is dominated by a pair of two-masted schooners and some buildings that stretch along a roadway, which disappears at the foot of a high hill topped by some trees and an ochre-colored structure that appears to have on its roof a steeple.

That is Charlie Stockbridge's perspective of the Old Ship Meeting House, circa 1885, when the building already had been looking down on the Town of Hingham for 200 years from its perch on Main Street. Today, more than a century later, Old Ship hardly needs a close-up for townspeople to recognize that handsome Gothic structure, which is the town's historical centerpiece.

Stockbridge, a self-taught artist whose love of vintage marine scenes could be attributed to his lineage, which stretches back four centuries to Colonial Scituate, was most pleased when he received a request to create a painting that would depict Hingham's most precious artifact from the early days.

That work, done in oil, in the realistic style of the era it represents, will be unveiled on June 18th during an art event, which is free and open to the public, in Old Ship's Parish House, 107 Main St., Hingham. The occasion – from 5 to 8 p.m. – will be a celebration of the generosity of the entire community during the recent campaign to raise funds for a major restoration of the Meeting House, its first in 80 years.

An investment adviser when he's not toiling in oils, Stockbridge had a special incentive to create this painting of the Meeting House, the fact that he is a direct descendent of Charles W. Stockbridge, the architect of the Gothic-style building, which was erected in 1681.

But he was facing a major challenge: how to approach a subject that has had its image replicated thousands of times, in all variety of media, over its long existence.

"I could have done a painting that was just the church," he said. But Stockbridge had no intention of doing that. His inspiration, he continued, "was the early paintings of Boston, which often were done from the perspective of the waterfront. Those paintings accentuated the height of Beacon Hill," where the State House sat, under a roof capped with a glowing golden dome.

It was the image of an iconic structure high on a hill toward which all eyes could turn for reassurance of permanence that Stockbridge wanted to capture in his painting.

Artist Charlie Stockbridge has donated his painting of Old Ship to silent auction this Saturday at Parish House.

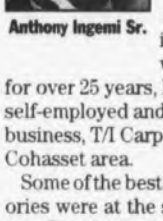
He had set himself no easy task. He didn't want to create a generic waterfront, but one that was as close as possible to the Hingham of another century. That turned out to be the 19th century, when Stockbridge, at the Hingham Historical Society, happened on a lithograph, dated 1885, of the waterfront and the buildings that ringed it then, including the structure that today houses Tosca's restaurant.

To enhance the accuracy of the work he searched through archives of material that included 1890s photos of houses, ancient scenes of Station Street, nearby marshes, railroad tracks and Hingham Cemetery.

"I even found an 1885 birds-eye-view drawing that must have been done from a balloon."



After much perusing, Stockbridge finally found what he believes was the point of view of the lithographer, somewhere out near Button Island in Hingham Harbor. As in any investigation, one discovery led to another, a process "that could have taken me a year. But I only had five months to do the painting."

Stockbridge will be on hand for Saturday's event, "Old Ship in Perspective: An Artful Celebration of Community Support." His painting, "Old Ship from Hingham Harbor, 1885," will be part of a month-long silent auction of works depicting Old Ship, which also have been donated by professional local artists.

90th anniversary

This month, King Jewelers celebrates 90 years of business; 49 of those years have been spent as a fixture on Route 3A in Cohasset.

Their business philosophy has always been the same: to provide customer service and to do community service. "We treat people like they are part of the family, not just customers," Valerie King said. Valerie and her sister, Victoria, two members of the third generation of King Jewelers, operate the store today in a building they constructed in 2005.

Team Hoyt to compete in triathlon

Fifth annual event Sunday at 8a.m.

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

Yes you can.

When the more than 800 athletes take to the waters off Sandy Beach as part of the fifth annual Cohasset Triathlon this Sunday, this can be their mantra.

Those athletes will take to racecourse alongside a father and son who have captured countless hearts and inspired thousands as they have defied obstacles most of us will never comprehend.

"It's an inspirational team competing in an inspirational race."
Bill Burnett, race director

Team Hoyt, comprised of father Dick Hoyt, 71, and his son, Rick, 49, are not your typical competitors. Rick has cerebral palsy, a condition he has lived with since birth. Rick can't walk or talk, and can only control the movement of his head. Yet, these limitations have not prevented Rick and his father from competing in more than 1000 races, ranging from 5Ks to Ironman Triathlons, and traveling across the country as inspirational speakers.

Team Hoyt lives by the motto "Yes you can" as they have faced down the hills of the Boston Marathon's Heartbreak Hill more than two dozen times, broken down barriers for those with disabilities, and inspired thousands of able-bodies people around the world — and they have done it while having the time of their life.

Runners first, the team began competing in triathlons, which involves swimming, biking and running, in the 1980s. They will compete in the Cohasset Triathlon for the first time on Sunday.

"It's an inspirational team competing in an inspirational race," said Cohasset Tri race director and founder Bill Burnett. Team Hoyt has competed twice in one of the Cohasset Triathlon's sister race, the Marlborough Triathlon.

"People love seeing Team Hoyt and I'm really excited people in Cohasset will be able to witness them race," Burnett said.

The story of Team Hoyt starts 33 years ago, when Rick arrived home from school with an idea that would change both his and his father's lives. There was a five-mile fundraising run being put on to help a teenage boy who had recently been paralyzed from the waist down in a car accident. Rick told his father through his specially designed computer he uses to communicate that he wanted to do the race to show the young man that his life was-

Senior Center

New course set for private funding

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

For more than two years town officials and volunteers have been working toward the building of a new senior center. Town Meeting articles have been passed, Community Preservation funding sought, a feasibility study has been completed, and fundraising has begun, but on Tuesday night a new direction was proposed.

A significant capital campaign would be undertaken by the League, in partnership with other non-profit groups such as the Friends of Elder Affairs, in order to fund the building.

The Social Service League of Cohasset, a non-profit that has been a key player in the project from its inception, came forward offering to build the senior center building privately.

After the building is built, which would be designed in partnership with the town, the Social Service would rent or lease space to the town.

This development comes in part in response to persistent concerns from the community and town officials over how a brand-new building, estimated to cost about $6 million, would be funded.

The Council on Elder Affairs anticipated turning toward several sources for

WHAT IS GOING ON HERE?

Lyme disease is on the rise

See editorial, page 14

What
Lyme disease is caused by bacteria that are spread by tiny, infected deer ticks.

Where
In Massachusetts, the disease occurs throughout the state.

When
Lyme disease can occur anytime during the year. Young ticks (the size of a poppy seed) are most active during the warm months between May and July. Adult ticks (the size of a sesame seed) are most active during the fall and spring but may also be out searching for a host anytime that temperatures are above freezing.

EXTRA IN YOUR MARINER

Symptoms
Symptoms of early Lyme disease usually begin to appear three to 30 days after being bitten by an infected tick. If untreated, symptoms of late Lyme disease may occur from weeks to years after initial infection. Symptoms may include a rash where the tick was attached and flu-like symptoms. Prompt treatment during the early stage with antibiotics prevents later, more serious problems.

Did you know
You do not have to be a hiker to worry about ticks. In Massachusetts you may be bitten in your own backyard. There are things you can do around your backyard to make it less inviting for ticks. For suggestions, visit the Massachusetts Department of Public Health Tickborne Disease Website: www.mass.gov/dph/tick

Legislative action
The House Committee on Post Audit and Oversight, recently released a report "Lyme disease in Massachusetts: a Public Health Crisis" that includes among other recommendations asking the Massachusetts Department of Public Health to look into the possibility of combining tick control efforts with state mosquito control efforts.

Aquarion calls for voluntary water conservation

Aquarion Water Company is asking customers in North Cohasset to voluntarily reduce their water consumption.

The Company is requesting all customers with irrigation systems, both permanent and temporary, to use water wisely. This means limiting the use of an irrigation system to no more than two days per week, before 6 a.m. and after 6 p.m., and ensuring the system is operating properly.

In the event the water demand is not reduced immediately through voluntary measures, the Company will be forced to reduce the water demand through mandatory water restrictions. The water restrictions imposed in 2010 banned the use of sprinklers and irrigation systems, and only allowed watering and outdoor water use on an odd/even basis between 6 and 9 p.m. using hand-held watering devices only.

For additional information and conservation tips call the Aquarion's Customer Service Department at 1-800-928-3734, or visit www.aquarionwater.com.

Regional dispatch center coming in September

Police station will be attended 24/7

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

In addition, a "safe area" with a phone and closed circuit surveillance system will be created inside the police station. The safe area will have the ability to be secured by someone in case they are in danger.

On September 20, Cohasset's emergency dispatch services will be relocated to the Hingham Town Hall as part of the regional dispatch center. That date will be the culmination of several years of work toward making this four-town cooperative effort a reality.

In essence the move will change the way 9-1-1 calls will be answered for Cohasset, Hull, Hingham and Norwell. Emergency calls will be routed to the Hingham call center where the dispatchers will dispatch the appropriate emergency personnel within each town.

Fire Chief Bob Silvia, who serves on the building committee for the regional dispatch center, said the center is nearly built out and the technology behind the state-of-the-art facility is coming together.

In Cohasset one of the concerns when this project was first explored was the potential for an unmanned police station overnight.

Interim Town Manager Steve Lombard said he and Police Chief Mark DeLuca have put their heads together to come up with a workable solution, both in terms of budget and public safety.

From 4p.m. to midnight, a new position of records clerk will be created to man the station as most of the officers on duty would be out on the street. From midnight to 8a.m., Lombard said they aim to engage the services of a police cadet to be a station attendant.

In addition, a "safe area" with a phone and closed circuit surveillance system will be created inside the police station. The safe area will have the ability to be secured by someone in case they are in danger.

Lombard said he expects there is money within the fiscal 2012 budget to pay the salaries of these positions. In the fiscal 2012 budget there is a $90,000 line item for dispatchers' salaries to see the department through the transition to the regional dispatch center in September. Lombard said there would likely be a surplus in that line item that could be transferred to the salary line item for the new positions. This transfer would require a vote of Town Meeting.

In future budgets, beginning in fiscal 2013, the cost of the new positions would be included, but Lombard said he did not expect the police budget to increase because of the savings realized from dispatchers' salaries.

The fiscal 2012 budget also includes $160,000 to pay for Cohasset's share of the regional dispatch center. The annual cost of the regional dispatch center is between $1.2 million and $1.4 million, Lombard said. Lombard expects Cohasset share to be between $180,000 and $200,000 for the first year.

As far as Cohasset's dispatchers, Lombard said all have put in applications to work for the regional dispatch center.

"Every one of our dispatchers is qualified to do the job," Lombard said. No one has yet to be hired for the new call center. "I anticipate all of them will transfer over if they wish to."

Dispatchers will be trained on the new equipment, which includes extensive mapping technology, before the dispatch center goes live.

Dispatchers currently working in all four towns are expected to be part of the regional dispatch center. There will initially be eight dispatcher stations with the ability to expand to 10 (if more communities want to join).

Unlike today where dispatchers know the intricacies of Cohasset roads and many of the residents, technology will play a key role in giving dispatchers the information they need to get emergency personnel to the call.

"Don't worry about the local knowledge piece because that stays with our police and fire departments who are responding," Silvia said.

DeLuca said the "hometown touch" of the dispatch center will be lost in this transition to a regional approach, "but that's the business."

An open house at the regional dispatch center will be held likely in August at the Hingham Town Hall on Central Street. In addition, Selectmen said they wanted to hold a public meeting in Cohasset sometime in September to education residents on the new regional dispatch center.

The project is funded by $3.6 million in state grants to cover construction, operating, and capital costs. In addition, several months ago the State 911 Department awarded a $2.2 million grant on top of the previous funding to go toward constructing, furnishing, and equipping the center. The towns also expect to receive an increase in annual grants from the state to operate the center.

Police Alleged larceny of water investigated

By Mary Ford
mford@wickedlocal.com

The possible larceny of water from an unoccupied house that is for sale is being investigated. Police received a call from a real estate agent reporting that a hose was going from the vacant house on S. Main Street to a house on a nearby side street. Officers went to the house where the water was apparently being run to and called the water department. They confronted the homeowner, a 40-year-old Cohasset man, who denied knowing anything about the siphoning of water from the vacant house, police said. Police said the real estate agent has found this happening before.

Police said there appears to have been larceny of water from one house to the other. There could be potential charges once it is determined how much water was taken and what the value of that water is.

Money clip

At 7:10 a.m. on Monday (June 13) a 55-year-old Cohasset man brought a black leather money clip with associated credit cards and a $100 bill to the station after finding the money clip on North Main Street during his morning walk. Police notified the owner, a 50-year-old Fairoaks Lane man, who said he had misplaced the money clip. It is not clear how the money clip ended up on N. Main Street.

Registration suspended

A 45-year-old Cohasset woman is being summonsed to court for operating with suspended registration. An officer on patrol on Pond Street on Wednesday (June 15) at about 7:19 a.m. observed that the 2007 Infiniti she was driving had an expired plate. Further investigation revealed the registration of the vehicle had been suspended for nonpayment of taxes.

Unlicensed

A 22-year-old Ellisville, Mass. woman is being summonsed to court for unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle. A concerned caller notified police on Friday (June 17) at about 6:36 p.m. about an erratically operated 1996 Honda Accord. The plate came back to a residence on Arrowwood Road. An officer went to that address and further investigation revealed the operator, who was using the homeowner's car, did not have a license. She was not impaired.

Tenant dispute

A tenant stopped by the police station last Wednesday (June 15) to report that her landlord had threatened to evict her that day. Police, who explained it was a civil matter, advised her that the eviction process is a month-long procedure. She had stopped rent payments due to conditions at the rental, she told police.

Mailbox

A 46-year-old King Street man asked for extra patrols after his mailbox valued at $100 was smashed. He reported the incident at 7:10 p.m. on Wednesday (June 15).

Rings missing

A 32-year-old Cohasset man reported to police last Thursday (June 16) that his home was unlawfully entered and two women's rings were taken valued at $4800 and $1800. The alleged victim thinks his ex-girlfriend who had been asking for money may be responsible, police said.

Scam

A Cohasset man, whose address was fraudulently used for an out-of-state scam last week, is checking with his bank and credit card companies to see if he has been the victim of identify theft.

Police said the scam involved the sale of a puppy for $450 over the Internet – but the purchaser received a $1750 check asking for the balance (minus the $450 be returned to them). The return address on the envelope with the paperwork was from Cohasset.

Limb fell

A Cohasset resident was instructed to seek restitution from the tree-trimming company after a limb fell on his 2002 Dodge Durango damaging the car. Police gave the resident the name of the company doing the tree work.

Dog complaint

An Old Pasture Road resident complained to police last week that her neighbor's dog keeps coming onto her property. Last Friday (June 17), the woman said the dog knocked her down and she was scratched after going over to the neighbor's house. The matter was referred to the Animal Control Officer who is following up.

iPhone taken

The parent of a 12-year-old Cohasset boy notified police last Friday that her son's iPhone 3G was taken after he left it on a bench by the playground behind the library.

Text messages

A man reported to police last week that he had received threatening text messages over an alleged $300 debt that he said he had paid back.

Hearing on water rate increase set for June 28

18.7 percent hike proposed

By Carol Britton Meyer
cmeyer@wickedlocal.com

This would be the second major Aquarion increase in three years, following a 24.8 percent overall rate hike in 2009.

The Town of Hingham has engaged legal counsel to represent that town as it faces a proposed 18.7 percent, or $2.8 million, water rate hike recently announced by Aquarion Water Company.

Aquarion serves Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset.

Hingham Town Administrator Ted Alexiades is in communication with Cohasset and Hull officials to discuss the possibility of sharing the expert witness cost. It is his intention to gauge the cost of litigation against how much the town could potentially save out of the proposed increase as a result of litigation.

Alexiades said Hingham has hired the firm of Epstein and August. Legal fees are expected to initially amount to about $45,000, with an additional expert witness cost of $15,000 to $20,000.

This would be the second major Aquarion increase in three years, following a 24.8 percent overall rate hike in 2009.

Public hearings

A local public hearing is scheduled for Tuesday, June 28, at 7 p.m. at Hingham Town Hall in the Central North and South Meeting Room on the second floor to receive input from town officials, residents, and other interested parties.

Written comments must be filed with the Department of Public Utilities, One South Station, 5th floor, Boston, MA 02110, by Tues., June 28, at 5 p.m. The hearing process could begin in the late summer or early fall of this year.

If approved, the new rates would go into effect in April 2012, costing the average Hingham, Cohasset, and Hull customers using 700 cubic feet of water per month an additional 33 cents per day, or about $10 per month. The earlier increase cost ratepayers $10.80 more per month.

"It is a top priority to deliver quality water service that is cost-effective, particularly given the tough economy," said Aquarion Vice President of Operations Harry Hibbard in a press release issued in May by the water company. "While increased costs have contributed substantially to the need for a rate adjustment, we have worked hard to contain expenses and ensure that our operations are streamlined and efficient. We are also committed to maintaining the integrity of the water system and have made wide-ranging infrastructure investments throughout our service area."

Hibbard also said at that time that Aquarion's "effective management of the system has allowed us to file a rate application that will meet the Company's obligations while remaining sensitive to the economic challenges facing our customers."

Background

The review process for the 2009 increase began the year before and included a public hearing. At that time, some 100 Hingham, Cohasset, and Hull residents and town officials turned out for a 3-1/2-hour Department of Public Utilities-hosted meeting at Hull High School to vehemently oppose the proposed increase. Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, also strongly opposed the proposed rate hike.

Both Hedlund and Bradley are involved this time around as well and have met with, or plan to meet with, Aquarion officials.

Rates cannot be increased or decreased without the agency's approval. Despite stiff opposition, the DPU ultimately approved the 2009 increase.

Most of the 2009 increase was attributed to investments totaling $21.4 million that Aquarion had made for water utility infrastructure improvements since 2001 in such areas as increased water supply and replacement of aging and undersized pipes as well as other needed water system enhancements, which amounted to the overall rate hike. The last prior increase was in 2001. Aquarion acquired the utility from Massachusetts-American Water Company in 2002.

The typical family of four uses about 175 gallons of water a day for cooking, washing, and laundry (or about seven full bath tubs'-worth of water), according to Aquarion officials.

Aquarion has implemented a number of cost-control measures, Hibbard said earlier. "Our commitment to efficiency and controlling costs has resulted in this rate request being $487,000, or 15 percent lower, than it would have been otherwise."

Sheriff announces Summer Youth Leadership Academy

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti announces the return this summer of the Youth Leadership Academy in Braintree.

The academy, which is operated by the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office, features an aerial ropes course and program that teaches kids the importance of working together and building trust between one another. The academy emphasizes the concept of mutual respect and the idea that people of different backgrounds can reach great heights by working together toward a common goal.

"We get such great feedback from parents about the program," Bellotti said. "Kids have fun and get plenty of good healthy exercise, but more importantly, they learn to make smart decisions and work together as a team."

The Youth Leadership Academy is run by a professional staff and includes talks on bullying prevention and demonstrations on emergency fire safety as well as a demonstration by a Norfolk County Sheriff's Office K-9 team. The issue of bullying is especially important to Bellotti, who serves on a special statewide commission reviewing implementation of Massachusetts' anti-bullying law.

The Youth Leadership Academy is open to children ages 10 through 14 who live in Norfolk County. It will take place in seven separate sessions, each running Monday through Friday, except the first session, that will take place Tuesday through Friday due to the Fourth of July holiday. The first session will begin on July 5, and the final session ends on Aug. 19. It takes place at the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office Braintree Public Safety Complex at 2015 Washington St., Braintree.

The academy is free, and prospective enrollees will be accepted on a first-come, first-serve basis.

This summer marks the return of the Youth Leadership Academy after a two-year hiatus due to budget constraints.

For more information about the Youth Leadership Academy or to receive an enrollment application, send an email to youth@norfolksheriffma.org or call the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office at 781-751-3501.

PARAPROFESSIONALS

Union contract inked

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

"I think we came away with a fair contract and I really appreciated the respect on both sides of the table."
Pearl Smith, paraprofessional

After two consecutive years of confusion around their benefits and salary, the school district's paraprofessionals decided to become a bargaining unit under the auspices of the Cohasset Teachers' Association.

Last week, the School Committee ratified the first agreement, valid through the 2011-2012 school year, with the union.

The agreement spells out benefits, such as sick time, personal time, and health insurance, and establishes clear pay grades and steps. It includes a 2.5 percent increase for the next school year.

"I was very pleased with the process. I think (the agreement) is fair. It's only a year contract, so we'll see how it goes," said Helene Lieb in a telephone interview.

Pearl Smith, one of the members of the paraprofessionals negotiating team, said overall for her the process was a positive one.

"I think we came away with a fair contract and I really appreciated the respect on both sides of the table," Smith said.

The paraprofessionals, who have had their pay rate changed and reverted back twice in the last two years, informed the school department they were seeking representation from the Cohasset Teachers' Association in early October.

In both 2009 and 2010 the paraprofessionals were changed from salaried employees to hourly employees before the beginning of the school year. A conversion from salary to hourly pay resulted for some paraprofessionals in a year-over-year reduction in pay. Other benefits, particularly for long-term employees, were impacted as well.

After the change was made by then-superintendent Denise Walsh, the group petitioned the School Committee to revert them back to salaried employees. They were successful on both occasions.

For most of the paraprofessionals, or education support professionals, the contract means there will be less of a question mark year to year.

"It's been a long road, but it's nice to have closure and I'm very happy with the outcome. We now have job security and our salary is secure," said Collette McElhinney, a paraprofessional at Deer Hill.

More than 30 employees are included in the union, and include instructional aides, teacher assistants, a library assistant, a technology aide and other similar positions. The employees are found at all levels of the school system from pre-K to the high school.

The agreement also spells out the grievance procedure for union employees. It delineates the process for reduction in force and access to the employee's personnel file. Under the agreement employees accrue sick days at the rate of 1.25 days per month and can accumulate up to 150 days. A sick bank previously established continues under the agreement. Each employee is entitled to three personal days per school year, but the days must be approved.

The contract also creates an annual allowance of up to $300 per employee for professional development, distributed on a first-come, first-serve basis, up to a total of $3,000.

The agreement also stipulates after three consecutive years of employment in a bargaining unit position, employees will not be disciplined or discharged except for just cause. Employees with less than three consecutive years of employment are appointed year-to-year and are subject to renewal or non-renewal at the discretion of the principal.

Negotiations between the School Committee and the union have been on going since March.

"It s been a very cooperative process," Lieb said.

Before the paraprofessionals joined under the umbrella of the Cohasset Teachers' Union, which is affiliated with the Massachusetts Teachers' Association, they were the largest of three non-union groups, or employees-at-will, working in the school district. Cohasset teachers and secretaries are also under the CTA umbrella. Bus drivers and two central office secretaries do not have a union contract.

Quincy charges

A 20-year-old Cohasset man could be facing the serious charge of assault and battery in Quincy after he allegedly beat up his mother's boyfriend outside a barroom in that city, police said. In Cohasset, the man was charged with violating a restraining order.

Skateboard

A 13-year-old Cohasset boy reported that his $255 Land Yachtz long skateboard was taken from the bike rack near the Cohasset Sailing Club on Saturday (June 18). It has gray wheels, silver trucks and a white bottom.

Sideswiped

An 89-year-old Cohasset man in a 2004 VW Jetta sideswiped a car on N. Main Street during the Arts Festival that was illegally parked and sticking out into the roadway, resulting in minor damage to the 2002 Chevrolet Blazer. The Blazer, which was ticketed, belonged to a man from Minot.

Police said a Border Street man was scratched when he tried to break up a dogfight between a mixed-breed poodle and a Rottweiler at about 2:30 p.m. on Monday (June

Next Town Manager getting acquainted

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

"With a humble heart, I thank you, and look forward to moving the community forward."
Michael Coughlin, next Town Manager

Michael Coughlin, the Board of Selectmen's choice to be the next Town Manager, got his feet wet by attending Tuesday night's Selectmen's meeting.

"I'm deeply honored by the faith the board has placed in me," Coughlin said. He is being brought up to speed on many of the issues facing the town by interim Town Manager Steve Lombard.

Over the weekend, Coughlin said he attended the Cohasset Arts Festival and felt welcomed to the community.

"Growing up in Salem in an Irish household I was told that if you ended up on the Irish Riviera you have really made something of yourself," Coughlin said. He told him mother about his new position over the weekend. "She started crying. With a humble heart, I thank you, and look forward to moving the community forward."

A Selectmen sub-committee consisting of chair Ted Carr and member Leland Jenkins are in the process of negotiating with Coughlin.

"(Coughlin) is fully on board with what we are talking about," Carr said in a phone interview this week. A draft of the contract is currently in process with Town Counsel.

"He is a true gentleman and is looking forward to getting started in Cohasset," Carr said.

Coughlin is expected to start full-time on August 1. Lombard is staying on until June 30 and plans to return a few days in July to help Coughlin get acclimated and keep things moving.

"I won't abandon you, I promise," Lombard said. "It's always a sad time when you've worked somewhere a long time – I feel part of this community. I try to leave things better off than I found them."

Selectmen vice chair Paul Carlson thanked Lombard for his service.

"It turned out to be a far more difficult situation than we expected. The town is much stronger now than it was back in October," Carlson said.

Police K-9 still under review

The Advisory Committee met with Police Chief Mark DeLuca to discuss the police department's proposal for a police K-9 on Tuesday night.

According to Advisory Committee chairman Peter Pescatore, the committee was not ready to put their support behind the police K-9.

"While we felt the police K-9 unit had a lot of advantages for the town in terms of effective policing, community relations, and public safety, we were uncomfortable that it was brought up outside the budget process," Pescatore said in a phone interview Wednesday morning.

The Advisory Committee will recommend to the Selectmen that the proposal be brought forward during the normal budget process.

Pescatore said the financial issues associated with the K-9 need to be explored further.

"As it is we were unable to (fully) fund the police overtime budget in 2011," Pescatore said. The police K-9 could potential create a situation where more overtime funding is needed.

Also, Pescatore said there were some reservations about having the police K-9 supported by an outside source a funding, a to-be-created nonprofit organization.

"If this fits a need the town has it should be funded through our budget," Pescatore said.

The committee also wanted to look more closely at neighboring towns that have K-9s to see how the special unit has or has not impacted their budgets.

Associate member for Planning Board

On Tuesday night, the Board of Selectmen and the Planning Board appointed North Main Street resident Judith Kasameyer to the position of Planning Board associate member.

The associate member is an elected position that is new to the town in 2009. Linden Drive resident Bill Hannon served as the town's first Planning Board associate member, but was elected as a full Planning Board member in the May election. He subsequently resigned from his position as associate.

Under Mass General Law, a vacancy in a town office must be appointed though a vote of the Board of Selectmen and the remaining members of the board in question. Four members of the Planning Board came to Tuesday's Selectmen meeting. The appointment is only until the next election.

Kasameyer has lived in Cohasset for 32 years. She has been active on the South Shore Arts Center board of directors and is a project manager/business analyst by trade.

The vote to appoint her was unanimous.

The Planning Board associate member votes on special permit applications if a regular Planning Board member is ineligible to vote due to absence from one of the public hearings, inability to act or conflict of interest, or in the event of a vacancy or an application that crosses an election.

Special permits include applications under the following zoning bylaws: wind energy conversion, transit-oriented district, cluster development and the village business district bylaw.

Special permits are unique because they require a "super majority" with four out of five members voting to approve the project.

Girls give ponytails to Locks of Love

School's out

Hello Cohasset! I am singing a jingle that I hope parents are singing too; I sure know that the kiddos are both young and old. It is, "Schools out...for the SUMMER!" Almost for the Osgood Grades 1 and 2, you are almost there! I hope that everyone is ready for a change of pace, a bit of relaxation when you can and hopefully, a lot of sun and fun for everyone. Have a great week ahead, Cohasset readers.

Locks of love

Here is a super "good news" item to share. Cohasset first-grade students from the Osgood School, Bridget Kondrat and Julia Willette along with Julia's cousin, Victoria Goodman, are sporting summer "dos" after a recent visit to Rudolph Adamo Salon. The trio has been growing their hair and together was able to donate 31 inches to Locks of Love. Good job girls, you are an inspiration!

Locks of Love is a public non-profit organization that provides hairpieces to financially disadvantaged children in the United States and Canada under age 21 suffering from long-term medical hair loss from any diagnosis.

Relay

Today, beginning at 3 pm at the CHS back field is this year's Cohasset, Scituate, Hingham and Hull Relay For Life. A fun, carnival-like theme with games, activities, music, food and other entertainment will be on hand for families, friends, children and survivors to enjoy. The Survivors will have their own lap to walk in as will the children at the event and then, at 9 p.m. will be the walking of the Luminaria Lap, where decorated bags filled with candles surround the walking path to honor and remember those who sadly, lost in the battle of Cancer. Grab your family, grab your friends and come to the Relay!

Visiting

Wow, I am amazed at how quickly time just seems to fly by and the once "little kids" grow up so fast. Five years ago, I had the pleasure of having two beautiful, spirited little girls in a series of my classes with Creative Kids. These two girls, Cadie and Noelle Higginson, came to Cohasset that year to stay with their grandparents because of the evacuation from New Orleans due to Hurricane Katrina.

I have received this great news to share with all. Cadie and Noelle will be returning soon to Cohasset for the summer! The girls also report their New Orleans traveling soccer team, the Louisiana Fire Blues, was chosen to be the sole United States representative at the One Nation Cup International Soccer Tournament, the week before the Women's World Cup, in Bremen, Germany. They had to defend their State Championship Title the day before they flew to Brement, arriving just in time to go to the opening ceremony. During the week, the Strike Squad beat Japan, Germany, the Netherlands and England, and finally won the whole tournament! Even more important than the victory, they said, was all the new friends they have from the 15 countries that participated.

Because of the many Cohasset friends that they have here, this is really good news to share and to follow. Welcome back for the summer, Cadie and Noell,e and a huge Cohasset cheer is being sent to you, congratulations!

Carol Spahn, right, is happy to receive a handcrafted replica of Minot Light, from Frank Smith of Fleming's. Fleming's held a drawing for one of the lighthouses.

Fleming's holds lighthouse drawing

Carol Spahn of Hingham was the winner of a handcrafted replica of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse sold at Fleming's on Elm Street. The talented Terry Murphy brought his lathe and crafting equipment from Michigan to demonstrate his lighthouse artistry to those who attended the South Shore Arts Festival last weekend.

Murphy's beautifully detailed models even flashed the famous 1-4-3 "I Love You" signal to delighted festival onlookers, and each piece in the limited edition is numbered and signed by the artist.

Fleming's on Elm Street held the drawing for one of the amazing lighthouses.

Church landscaping wins national award

There were those members of the Second Congregational Church's congregation who felt that its landscaping needed to be refreshed and could be improved. They decided to act. With Barbara Dillon, a long time, exceptionally active member of the Community Garden Club Cohasset, working on a landscaping plan and thinking about the plantings, with Wayne Sawchuk, who served as the head of the committee, generously providing the plant material and necessary machines to do a professional job, also with a dedicated, hard working, small group of "parishioner-gardeners," and the encouragement of the Rev. Gary Ritts, the church's senior minister — 65 flowers, shrubs and trees were planted and mulched, ready to greet and surprise the church members on Mother's Day morning in May 2010.

Ann Pompeo, one of the workers on the project, and also a past president of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset, submitted the necessary materials and information about this project to the Massachusetts Federation of Garden Clubs for an award. The project won first place in the state and was then sent on to the national competition. On May 28, at the annual convention of National Garden Clubs in Washington, D.C., the redesign and replanting of the gardens around the Second Congregational Church, as presented by the Community Garden Club Cohasset, was the number one overall winner in the United States.

Although the white church with its elegant spire and attractive landscaping adds an imposing presence to Cohasset's Common Historic District, a listing on the National Register of Historic Places, the comments on the award were directed to the way the new landscaping would affect the church's community. The new design would help with the layout of its yearly June Strawberry Festival; a spot for newlyweds to take a photo; areas for the Sunday School children to plant spring bulbs; or a place for a quiet private walk.

HSAR holds sixth annual Fur Ball

Hull Seaside Animal Rescue (HSAR) a 501 (c) (3) non-profit, no-kill cat shelter is holding their sixth annual Fur Ball on June 25, from 7-10 at the Hull Yacht Club. Tickets are $25 per person and can be purchased at the door or at hsar.org. All proceeds from the Fur Ball will go directly to HSAR for the care and shelter of homeless cats in Hull and surrounding towns.

"The Fur Ball is a fantastic way to enjoy great food and dancing with friends as well as take in beautiful views of the sunset, Hull Bay and the Boston skyline. And the price of a ticket will go directly toward helping and caring for our beautiful cats and kittens." said Stephanie Seal, HSAR board member.

Ticket price includes a hot and cold dinner buffet, salad, appetizers, desserts, coffee and tea, as well as ballroom dancing lessons from local professionals with plenty of music to practice by. A cash bar will also be open. The $25 fee also includes three raffle tickets with more available to purchase during the Ball. Raffle items include gift certificates from local restaurants and businesses as well as silent auction items to bid on such as a clambake for six from Jake's Restaurant or a birthday party at Hull's Carousel.

The Hull Seaside Animal Rescue, a no-kill shelter, was founded in 1999 by a handful of concerned citizens that understood the need to establish an animal rescue and shelter program. Because of space constraints, cats are the only residents presently at the shelter.

90 years of business

King Jewelers honors history, family

The King Family - Melissa King McNamara, Valerie King, June King, Victoria King, Heidi King Hickey. PHOTOS/LAURA SINCLAIR

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

In 1921, Albert Einstein won the Nobel Prize in Physics, the US formally declared peace with Germany following World War I, Warren Harding was President – and King Jewelers opened its doors in Lexington.

Although the world has changed drastically since that time, King Jewelers, owned and operated by the King family and involving four generations, has been able to grow, adapt and succeed through it all.

This month, King Jewelers celebrates 90 years of business; 49 of those years has been spent as a fixture on Route 3A in Cohasset.

Their business philosophy has always been the same: to provide customer service and to do community service.

"We treat people like they are part of the family, not just customers," Valerie King said. Valerie and her sister, Victoria, two members of the third generation of King Jewelers, operate the store today in a building they constructed in 2005.

Whether a customer has come in for a watch battery replacement or an engagement ring, everyone is treated the same. Treating people like family comes easy because most of the employees are family. Valerie and Victoria's mother, June King, is still involved in the business, along with aunt Maredith King and cousin, Heidi King Hickey. Valerie's daughter, Melissa McNamara King, joined the team in 2009.

"We enjoy each other and we really love each other," Valerie said. Even though there are arguments, like any family or any business partnership, the love they have for each other makes amends come easier.

"At the end of the day we're still family," Melissa said. "There's just a nice feeling in the store and I think it's because we're all so comfortable with each other. We know each other as co-workers and as family."

Looking back on 90 years has given the family a chance to celebrate the legacy started by their father, Forrest King, Jr. and grandfather, Forrest King.

"We have a great deal of pride and accomplishment that we were able to continue the business after our father died...and not only have we been able to continue it, but I think we have been able to grow it in the same direction our father would have wanted it to," Valerie said. Forrest King Jr. died unexpectedly in 1985. "He's always in the back of our minds."

One of the ways Kings has been able to expand its services in the last year is with the construction of an on-site jewelers workshop enabling nearly all repairs and customized jewelry to be done in the Cohasset store. Hand in hand with that is the hiring of Mark Khouri, a custom jewelry designer with more than 25 years of experience.

Khouri has brought Mark Michael Designs to the store – their own brand – and existing jewelry can be customized pieces according to a customer's tastes and style.

King Jewelers is not a stranger to unique designs, Forrest Jr. patented the earring jacket in 1969 and the design remains a standard in the jewelry industry.

More than a jewelry store, Kings strives to be a part of the community in many respects. That legacy in many ways dates back to Forrest King Jr., who helped found the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce and put together the inaugural Holiday Stroll involving both village and Route 3A business.

"It's important to give back to the community because they give to you," Valerie said.

Over the years they have been a part of the Daffodil Days campaign for the American Cancer Society, Habitat for Humanity, the South Shore Art Center and many local education, sports, and arts organizations and foundations.

As King Jewelers celebrates 90 years, and looks ahead to the future, it's clear family will always be central to their business.

"What we have is pretty special," Valerie said.

Melissa King McNamara shows Jessica Logan of East Bridgewater a Pave Princess Cut Diamond. Jessica recently became engaged.

A celebration for nine decades of business

On Thursday, June 30 King Jewelers is having an all-day celebration to commemorate the four generations and 90 years of their family business. The event will go from 10a.m. to 8p.m., with refreshments and entertainment by musician Matt Chase from 5 to 8p.m.

The entire store's ceiling will be covered with balloons. Each one filled will be filled with a special gift worth at least $10. Local businesses donated gift certificates and there are some jewelry pieces as well. Customers purchase a balloon for $20 and then pop the balloon to get their prize. All the proceeds from the balloon pop will go to the Whalen Family Benefit Trust to benefit Scituate resident (and her family) Catherine Rose Whalen, a mother of four girls, who is coping with ALS.

During the day, the majority of the items in the store will be 10 to 70 percent off. Ten percent of the profits from the day will be donated to the ALS Foundation.

During the evening, to honor Forrest King, Jr., who brought King Jewelers to Cohasset in 1962, the store will be raffling off a pair of earring jackets. He patented the earring jacket in 1969.

Balancing school with business

CHS student is website designer

By Sara Hollingshead

School may be out for the summer, but Cohasset High School junior, lead designer and owner of Bell Web Design, Colin Bell is still hard at work.

After watching a local web designer build a website for his mother, Colin realized he could do the same thing. He then taught himself web design and was able to build another website for his mother. Since then, Colin has been able to create numerous websites with varying levels of sophistication and complexity for different clients. As Colin remarks on his interest in technology and web design, he explains, "If you were to ask anybody who knows me they would tell you I'm not much of an artist on paper, however, on a computer screen I'm able to create some pretty cool stuff, which is why I like building websites."

Still in high school, Colin has had to find a balance between school and work. He says he has run into trouble as a high school businessman, especially when communicating with clients, as Colin explains, "the best time to communicate with most people is from 9-5 and that's basically when I'm occupied with school work and other activities but I find a good balance." To Colin though, "the idea of being a businessman in high school is great."

Classes at Cohasset High School have also enhanced Colin's business. Colin reflects on how his economics class with teacher Michael Welch taught him a lot about business and finance, while he is also planning to take a computer science class next year. Before graduating in 2013, Colin hopes to learn more about business and running your own company. Colin has also been able to learn about running his own business from his mother, who also runs her own company.

Creating a website takes Colin anywhere from 4-5 days to 2-3 weeks. With his busy plate, things can get hectic, as he notes, "I would say the hardest part about being a web designer, businessman and student is staying grounded and managing everything at once. An advantage for me is that I'm very organized I so rarely forget about things."

Colin further explains that the support he has received from his family and friends has really helped him. In encouraging his peers to start their own businesses, Colinsays that having a good support team to keep you grounded and focused is vital. He hopes to continue with Bell Web Design throughout high school and is anxious to what he'll be able to do with it.

SANDY BEACH

Summer's really here! Beach is open

Opening: The beach officially opened last Saturday. Lifeguards will be on duty from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m., daily, through Labor Day weekend. We have hired a new beach manager named Liz Macki. She will be in charge of scheduling and guard procedures for the staff of summer lifeguards and beach maintenance workers (cleaning staff). She has seven years of life guarding experience including head guard at Nantasket Beach in Hull. A Lightning Meter will be in use again this year to alert guards and beachgoers that lightning is in the area and that the beach needs to be closed. Please remember that lifeguards are there to protect beachgoers and it is important that people follow their instructions. Please come say hi to Liz and our terrific guard and BMW staff.

Clean-up: This past winter was particularly harsh to Sandy Beach leaving piles of seaweed and debris on our beautiful beach. Last week the annual clean-up was completed and we are ready for summer! Our contractor, Ross Rosano, has completed the clean-up of the seaweed, taken it to Holly Hill Farm for recycling, and removed all the debris from winter storms. Thank you Ross!

History: The Sandy Beach Association is a nonprofit organization run by eight volunteer Trustees. The land for Sandy Beach was donated to this trust in 1917 to ensure that the beach would forever be held for the citizens of Cohasset to enjoy. The Sandy Beach Association manages the beach property only. The town owns and manages the parking lot.

Scholarship: The Trustees are pleased to announce the recipient of the Sandy Beach Association Scholarship. This $1,000 scholarship is awarded to High School a senior who demonstrates a passion for marine biology and environmental studies. Congratulations to Caroline Collins. Caroline worked for the CSCR doing bacteriological testing for beach water quality throughout Cohasset in conjunction with the board of Health. Caroline plans on attending Connecticut College in the fall. Congratulations Caroline!

Stickers: All facilities stickers are available for sale now at the Town Clerk's office in Town Hall. Stickers can be purchased from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday, Wednesday and Thursday; 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m., on Tuesdays; and 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., on Fridays. This all-facilities sticker gives residents access to the recycling center and the beach parking lot. As a reminder, stickers are required for all cars to park at Sandy Beach. Parking fine for parking without a permit is $50. Last year's stickers expire on June 30, 2011.

Triathlon: On June 26, the fourth annual Cohasset Triathlon will be run through the town of Cohasset. This race will begin at 8 a.m. A portion of the beach parking lot will be closed at 12 p.m., on Saturday, June 25. The entire parking lot will be closed until noon, on Sunday, June 2. Lifeguards will be on duty on Saturday the 26th, until 7 p.m. Lifeguards will not be on the beach until noon on Sunday the 27th. Please plan accordingly.

Rules: The Sandy Beach Association asks that you respect the rules of the beach. Alcohol, fires, fishing, glass bottles, or flotation devices are prohibited anywhere on the beach. Frisbees, hard balls, kites, skimmers and boogies boards are allowed in orange cone marked areas only. Climbing on rocks on either side of the beach is extremely dangerous and prohibited.

Dogs are not permitted on the beach from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m., from mid-June through Labor Day. If you bring your pet to the beach during off-hours, it is imperative that you pick up after your dog.

Facebook: The Sandy Beach Association is on Facebook. We have established a fan page. Please join this page and we'll post announcements, beach closings, hours and relevant information (and fun photos) here for all to see. Our column "Sandy Beach Happenings" will be in the paper each week. Remember to read this column each week for beach updates, information and tide schedules.

Support: By now you should have received the Sandy Beach Association annual fundraising letter. This mailing is the only source of fundraising for the Sandy Beach Association. The fee for your parking sticker funds the parking lot only – it does not cover the costs of beach cleanup, staffing or beach operations. The beach operations including staffing, cleaning and managing the bathhouse are run entirely through private donations to the Sandy Beach Association. The beach can't operate as it does without the generous support of Cohasset residents. Donations can be sent to P.O. Box 285, Cohasset. Thank you for your help. We look forward to seeing you at Sandy Beach.

For Michele, one of the greatest advances in cancer care has been the one on the South Shore.

When Michele needed treatment for breast cancer, she was thankful that she could receive world-renowned care at Dana-Farber/Brigham and Women's Cancer Center in clinical affiliation with South Shore Hospital. And she had confidence knowing that our specialists, focused on cancer, were providing the expert care she needed. But she also found something more: how important it was to be treated in a place that not only cared for her cancer, but also for her life.

"It's a place filled with hope," said Michele. And having all the integrated services she needed close to home helped her maintain a sense of normalcy through her treatments. "With two small kids, I don't know how I would have managed otherwise," she explained. "Having this level of cancer care on the South Shore — it means everything to me."

OUR VIEW

Scourge of Lyme disease

Even though we have written about Lyme disease in the Mariner and are aware that it has become an important health issue in the region – the pervasiveness of the disease did not really hit home until someone very close to me was diagnosed: me!

For the record, I do not own a dog, am not a gardener or a hiker, and because of the demands of my job as editor of the Cohasset Mariner and Hingham Journal, I am rarely outside for any length of time.

Due to a recent death in my family – I did sit on the grass under a tree for a short period of time at the end of May to gather my thoughts, and believe that is where I must have had an encounter with a deer tick.

A private person, I am not comfortable sharing personal information but feel in this case, if I can contract Lyme disease with my lifestyle then no one is safe from it.

I do not recall being bitten by a tick but did notice a large red circular rash on the side of my torso about two weeks ago. I immediately "googled" Lyme disease and made an appointment to see my doctor. I was also experiencing some flu-like symptoms.

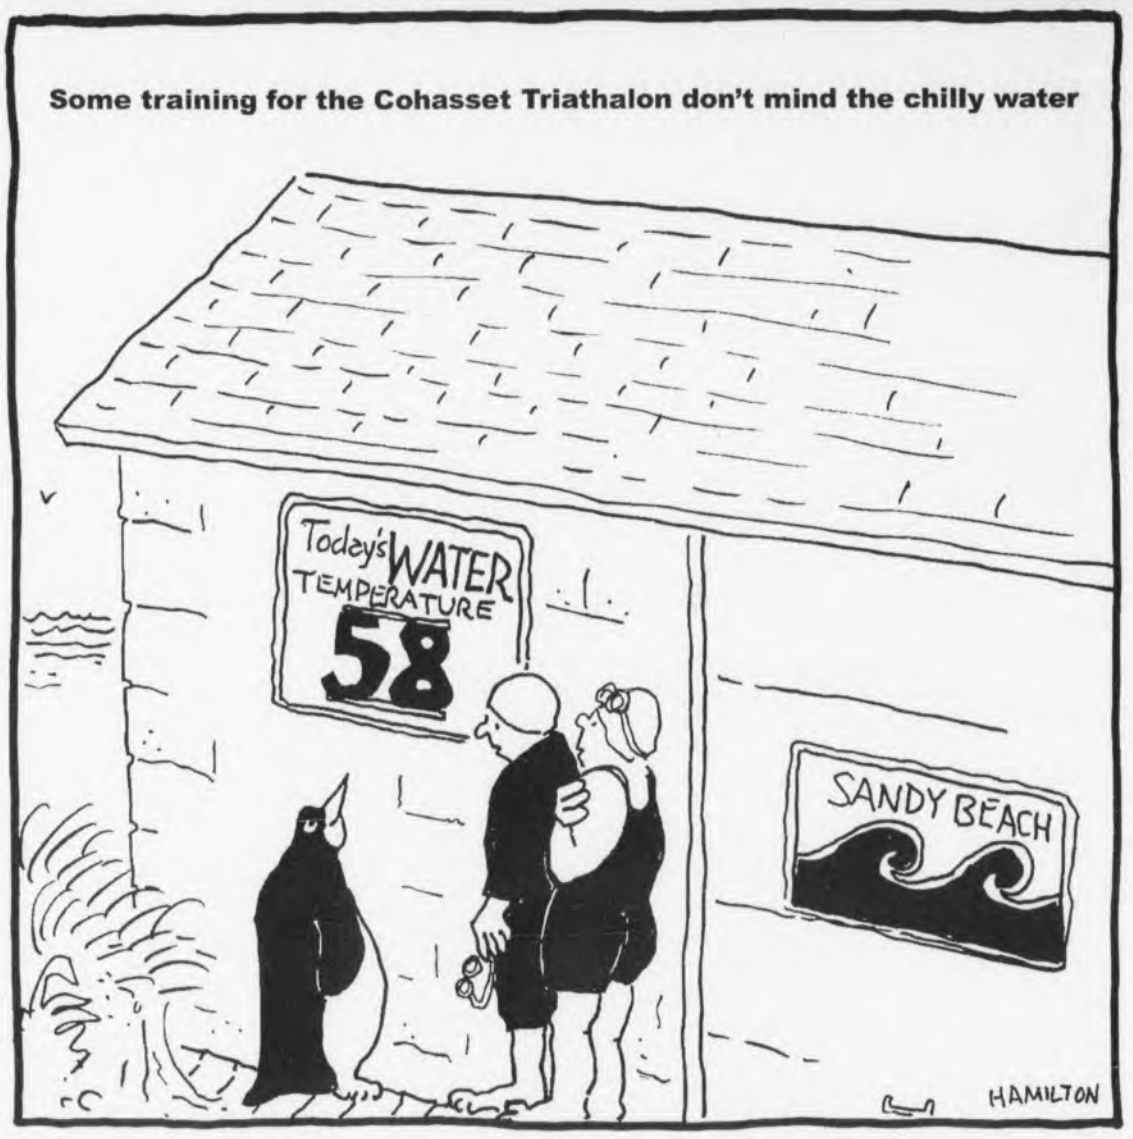
I am now on a course of antibiotics and am told I am lucky because I did actually get the rash – not everyone does.

The facts are that Massachusetts has one of the highest incidence rates of Lyme disease nationwide – almost 4-1/2 times higher than the national incidence rate, according to state health officials.

Evidence of the magnitude of the problem here locally is the recent (April 2011) report from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts House of Representatives dubbed: "Lyme disease in Massachusetts: A Public Health Crisis."

David P. Linsky, chairman of the House Committee on Post Audit and Oversight, writes in the report:

"The Committee calls for a state chartered commission to immediately convene and bring together experts in medicine, wildlife management, public health, and insect control, as well as patients and advocates to propose solutions regarding treatment, prevention and education," he stated.



"The Committee calls upon healthcare providers and insurers to make all necessary treatment accessible and affordable and for the Massachusetts Department of Public Health to look into the possibility of combining tick control efforts with state mosquito control efforts. The Committee further calls upon the Legislature to appropriate whatever funds are necessary to accomplish these goals."

Treating Lyme disease once someone has it is very important. Preventative measures – such as checking yourself for ticks and avoiding tick-prone areas when possible – are also important.

But clearly more has to be done to reduce the population of ticks. We support the recommendations of the Post Audit and Oversight Committee. We need to get a better handle on Lyme disease before the problem gets completely out of control.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Thanks for produce donations

Thanks to Nancy White's terrific article in last week's Mariner, the Cohasset Food Pantry received an abundance of fresh vegetables from many of our community gardeners on Tuesday morning. Our clients were thrilled to take home several varieties of lettuce, spinach, onions and assorted vegetables.

We would like to thank the following community members who so generously donated their fresh produce: Peter Pescatore, Anna Abbruzzese, Ruth Delay, the Askjaer Family, and Holly Hill Farm.

Hopefully this is just the beginning of a bountiful summer!

Gate device key to healthy meadow

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Operator and mounting pedestal on the gate chamber.

Jacobs Meadow Outfall Project -Last week we introduced you to the vertical sluice gate that will permit us to provide improved control for the Jacobs Meadow storm drainage. Additionally, it will provide for starting the restoration of Jacobs Meadow into a more viable salt marsh. At this point you may ask how equipment in the harbor can help restore a salt marsh on the other side of the road? The answer is really much simpler than you might think.

The salt marsh in Jacobs Meadow has changed over the years from a salt marsh to a fresh water marsh due the inability of salt water to enter the marsh from the harbor and the fresh water entering from the two brooks that feed the marsh. Consequently, species of plants and critters in the marsh have changed over the years due to this change from a salt to a fresh water environment. Salt marshes are very critical to the health of the harbor because these marshes offer juvenile species of aquatic animals a place where they can grow and mature before they enter the big wide world of the harbor and ocean.

Years ago, the channel next to the Legion was an open channel with relatively free flow between the harbor and the meadow. Elm Street actually passed over the open channel on a bridge. Under those conditions, Jacobs Meadow was more than likely a healthy salt marsh. But now, the marsh is loaded with a very invasive fresh waterweed called phragmites. This weed, which is a high fire hazard, dislikes salt water, but it thrives in fresh water. As an interesting note, phragmites has a very high resin content that makes it flammable. But, it is also the resin content that makes it water resistant and very useful in historic England for roof thatching.

Now, if we can add a controllable gate structure to the harbor side we can actively adjust the flow of salt water into the marsh environment, and conversely control when storm water can exit to the harbor. Thus, over a period of time, the controlled introduction of salt water into Jacobs Meadow will begin to kill off the phragmites since they dislike salt water. As the phragmites begin to diminish, natural salt-water marsh flora will begin to return. Those are the reasons that this project has both a strong environmental component as well as the underlying anti-flooding component.

Last week we talked about the tide gate itself and showed a picture of it being lifted into place. This week we will talk about the device that makes the gate go up and down. Within the last week our contractor installed a gate operator above the gate. The contractor also installed a threaded rod that connects the gate to the operator. Both can be seen in the accompanying photo. If you look at the photo closely you can see that the threaded rod is actually inside a clear plastic tube. This gives the rod some protection from the weather. In fact, all of the electrical components in the gate operator have been specifically designed to be protected from our harbor environment.

The gate operator is a "smart" device that provides the power to move the gate in either direction, up or down. The gate operator is mounted on top of a 3-foot high pedestal, which raises the operator above any expected high water level. The threaded rod connects the operator to the gate. The rod to moves up or down when the operator shaft rotates. The operator itself consists of several components built into a single package. To the left hand side is an electric motor that provides the power to raise and lower the gate. The rectangular box at the top of the operator contains the electronic controls that are an integral part of the operator. These controls generate signals that indicate the gate position as well as control the gate to go "up," "down" or "stop." To the right of the motor and below the control box is a very specialized gearbox. The gearbox reduces the speed of the motor, but at the same time, increases its pulling power to generate enough oomph to raise the gate ("oomph" is a highly technical term used often by engineers).

The last photo shows the gate operator from a distance. You can see how it is mounted directly to the beam at the top of the gate. As a matter of trivia, it takes about 10 minutes to raise the gate from a fully closed position to open, or conversely, from open to closed. Wiring connects the operator to the control panel located on the "mainland" behind the Veteran's Memorial wall. Next week we will review the control panel, which are the brains of the whole operation.

BRIEFLY

Cat Dam hearing continued to July 7

After a two-and-a-half hour hearing on June 9 the Conservation Commission decided to continue the public hearing process until Thursday, July 7 at 7p.m.

The Conservation Commission is considering a Notice of Intent application from the town regarding the Cat Dam tide gates. The tide gates are owned by the town and are located on private property on Nichols Road. The gate affects the flow of water into and out of inner Little Harbor.

The Conservation Commission has the task of evaluating and synthesizing this data and making a determination on how to move forward. In particular, the Conservation Commission has to approve a new operation and maintenance schedule for the tide gates.

HEALTH NOTES

Sunburn can have serious effects

STEVE BOBO

The only cure for sunburn is slow healing, although some skin creams can help with the symptoms. Massachusetts lists some 50 deaths from melanoma annually.

Sunburn: Now that we've finally determined what the sun looks like after a spongy fall, winter and spring, it's time to begin to worry about the various protections needed in warm weather. Most experts are now predicting great fluctuations in temperature, wet weather and sunlight; and lest we forget the various safeguards, a few sunny days are here to remind us.

A sunburn is a burn to living tissue, such as skin, which is produced by overexposure to ultraviolet (UV) radiation, commonly from the sun's rays. Usual mild symptoms in humans and other animals include red or reddish skin that is hot to the touch, general fatigue and mild dizziness. An excess of UV radiation can be life-threatening in extreme cases. Exposure of the skin to lesser amounts of UV radiation will often produce a suntan.

Excessive UV radiation is the leading cause of primarily non-malignant skin tumors. Sunscreen is widely agreed to prevent sunburn, although some scientists argue that it may not effectively protect against melanoma related to skin cancer. Worldwide, doctors diagnose about 160,000 new cases of melanoma yearly. More frequent in women than in men and common among Caucasians in sunny climates, WHO report about 48,000 melanoma related deaths worldwide per year. Clothing, including hats, is considered the preferred skin protection method. Moderate sun tanning without burning can also prevent subsequent sunburn, as it increases the amount of melanin, a skin photo-protectant pigment that is the skin's natural defense against overexposure. Importantly, both sunburn and the increase in melanin production are triggered by direct DNA damage. When the skin cells' DNA is damaged by UV radiation, Type I cell-death is triggered and the skin is replaced. Malignant melanoma may occur as a result of indirect DNA damage if the damage is not properly repaired. Proper repair occurs in the majority of DNA damage. The only cure for sunburn is slow healing, although some skin creams can help with the symptoms. Massachusetts lists some 50 deaths from melanoma annually.

Other safeguards: Sun isn't the only threat we have during warm weather. Heat exhaustion and too strenuous exercise can sap strength and lead to complications. Take it easy in warm summer weather and drink sufficient liquids.

Summer is a great time to enjoy the outdoors. Hiking, biking and summer sports are terrific opportunities to get some exercise and enjoy the season. Avid golfers anticipate warm weather and the chance to play their favorite game.

But along with summer's opportunities come some seasonal dangers that we shouldn't ignore – and one of those dangers is no bigger than a pinhead. Deer ticks and black-legged ticks are tiny arachnids that populate wooded areas, fields, paths, trails and roadways from the nation's Midwest to Northeast. By attaching themselves to host organisms, including people, and feeding on the host's blood supply, ticks can transmit a variety of diseases. The Mass DPH reports that the state has documented six tick-borne diseases in past seasons: Rocky Mountain spotted fever, erlichiosis, tularemia, Q-fever, a "southern tick-associated rash illness," and Lyme or a Lyme-like disease. It's always a good idea to be aware of the various critters that may attach themselves to you in the woods.

FOR THE RECORD

Throwing out a softball challenge

I'd like to throw out a challenge to folks who may have a company team and would be interested in playing some "mildly competitive" coed softball against us.

GREGORY MATHIS

Diamonds can be rough, especially if you're not in the best of shape and creeping up there in age.

I know, because that describes me.

We recently got a group of colleagues, spouses and other family members together to play some coed softball in a local tournament. It sounded like a terrific idea when the press release came across the news desk announcing the event. We quickly had commitments from several people in the office and the excitement began to build as we discussed cool nicknames and what number we wanted on the back of our jersey.

Our team manager kept reminding us of the entry fee, but as excited as people were to play and get a T-shirt, they didn't seem ready to make that leap of faith and actually commit by putting their money where their mouth was. So we weren't really sure what kind of team we were going to field until we got to the park.

Needless to say ours wasn't a team made up of softball regulars who play every weekend, or every other weekend for that matter. Maybe more like once a year if we're lucky.

Many of us may have been more athletic on a more regular basis at some point in our lives, but that time has clearly passed many of us by. That didn't stop the stories of our glory days, followed by comparing old injuries and tallying knee surgeries and other procedures. As we warmed up playing catch, a debate waged about whether some of us older folks should be stretching as well. We determined that stretching may actually injure us more than just taking the field. Looking back on that decision, it may have been smarter to do some stretching.

I can tell you that playing three seven-inning games in one day, in just under a four-hour span of time, is not the way to gradually work yourself into any kind of softball shape after not having played in a year.

While the games were fun and mildly competitive, the running and throwing and swinging and sliding took its toll. So much so that it was hard to move the following day. And when I say hard, I mean next to impossible. My legs felt a hundred pounds each, my upper back was stiff from swinging a bat and my right elbow and shoulder were sore from making throw after throw from shortstop to first base.

And to think we paid to play.

But it was worth it in the end. We lost the first game of the tournament by two runs, won the second game in our last at bat, and got knocked out of the double-elimination tournament in the third game, which frankly came as a relief for many of us. The thought of having to play a fourth game was no incentive for us to try too hard to win the third.

With that experience behind us, I'm hoping it doesn't take us another year to play again. With school out and the weather getting much better, I'd like to throw out a challenge to folks who may have a company team and would be interested in playing some "mildly competitive" coed softball against us. We're clearly not an intimidating force, but we do enjoy the competition and the camaraderie. And maybe we can play to help out a cause if we can get some people to come out and watch.

If you're interested in playing, shoot me an email at gmathis@wickedlocal.com with some possible dates, times and a field and maybe we'll see you on the softball diamond.

TRIATHALON

n't over, Dick said.

At the time, Dick was far from being a runner. He ran short distances on a regular basis, but he was not prepared for a five-mile race, let alone running one while pushing his son's wheelchair.

"We arrived and I don't think anybody expected us to go beyond the first corner," Dick recalls of the fateful day. "But we finished – next to last, but not last."

But, it was when they crossed that finish line that the magic happened.

"Rick had on the biggest smile you have ever seen," Dick said. Later, he told his father when he was running it felt like his disability disappeared — a pretty powerful statement from a 15-year-old who had never walked a step in his young life.

They both knew they were onto something. A custom wheelchair was built for Rick and Dick began a regular running regimen. But, still they faced uphill battles — and not just on the courses.

"People wouldn't talk to us, people didn't want us to be a part of their races because we were different," Dick said. The pair persevered, putting up strong finishing times and making a name for themselves.

The pair's now signature race, the Boston Marathon, at first didn't allow them to compete as regular entrants. In 1981, as bandits (runners without numbers) Team Hoyt ran its first Boston Marathon in three hours and 18 minutes, beating 85 percent of the racing field. They ran again as bandits in 1982 and 1983, both times in under three hours. Still, they were turned down as numbered competitors.

The Boston Marathon is the only marathon in the world where you have to run another marathon in a qualifying time according to their age group before being allowed a number, Dick said. So, off to Washington D.C. they traveled to compete in the Marine Corps Marathon. They had to get a qualifying time according to Rick's age, then in his 20s, which was 2:50. Together they completed the race in 2:45:23.

They competed in their first official Boston Marathon in 1984 and have missed only one in the years since. At the 100th running of the Boston Marathon in 1996, Team Hoyt was honored as "Centennial Heroes."

Shortly after that first Boston Marathon run they were approached about competing in triathlons. The swim-bike-run competition was another challenge. The pair needed specially designed equipment – and new training.

"The first time I jumped in the lake, I sank," Dick recalls with a laugh.

Their first triathlon, which was an Olympic distance tri (one mile swim, 25-mile bike and 6-mile run), was a hilly course on a hot day, he said. They came in next to last, but fell in love with the sport.

"After that race we began calling ourselves triathlon freaks. We've competed in more than 250 triathlons since then," Dick said.

To race together in triathlons the pair has special equipment. For the swim leg, Rick is placed in a boat with a life preserver and Dick pulls the boat by a line attached to a belt around his stomach. To complete the transition, Dick must pick the 127-pound Rick up from the boat and take him to the transition area. Awaiting them there is a bike with a chair in front of the handlebars for Rick. During the run, the pair uses their racing wheelchair.

"With triathlons you have the three different sports and they are all very exciting," Dick said. Team Hoyt is competing in a triathlon nearly every weekend this summer.

This weekend will be the Hoyts' first time in Cohasset.

"I've heard it's beautiful so we're really looking forward to it," Dick said, who praised race director Burnett for his organization and attention to detail. "There's attention to every detail...you know you are going to be safe and have fun."

Team Hoyt will start the swim off Sandy Beach in the first wave of athletes at 8a.m. and then continue throughout the course.

Live concert post-race

For the first time this year, the Cohasset Triathlon is inviting residents and participants to a post-race concert at 11:30a.m. The concert includes performances by Overshine and Aldous Collins on a big stage on Sandy Beach. The parking lot will be open to the public (with Cohasset stickers) for the concert. The bike racks will be taken down to make room for the parking and audience.

CPA holds Father's Day Barbeque

LIZA CARENS SALERNO

After a damp spring, the sun rose warm and bright for the annual Father's Day Barbeque sponsored by the Cohasset Police Association on behalf of Cohasset seniors. An enthusiastic group of seniors enjoyed lunch at Cohasset Lightkeepers on June 16 along with stunning views of White Head and the Harbor. Representatives from the Police Department and the Explorers program prepared and served a seasonal spread of grilled hamburgers, hot dogs, salads and cake.

Historically held at the Senior Center, the lunch moved to the Lightkeepers this year as a result of overwhelming demand. Transportation for those requiring it was provided via van driven by a Cohasset Elder Affairs volunteer.

Officer Greg Hartnett, the police department liaison to Cohasset Elder Affairs, kicked off the occasion with humorous anecdotes that drew laughter and applause, before inviting the approximately 50 guests to partake in their meal. Chief Mark DeLuca said: "A big part of policing is our relationship with the community. Seniors are our number one citizens. They paid their dues. It is an honor to do this for them." A.J. Antoine, an attendee, described the lunch as "one of the most wonderful things that we have. Everyone is so nice and it is great to have a liaison to the police department."

As uniform-clad police officers waited tables, delivering hot-off-the grill food, Coral Grande, Director of Cohasset Elder Affairs said: "This is one of the ways that the Police Department establishes and maintains rapport with our seniors. Seniors get to know the police though events like this as well as the annual spaghetti lunch that the department holds in the winter. It establishes connections, making it easier for seniors to reach out to the department when there is a need."

Each guest received a raffle ticket for chances at Pizza House gift certificates, Stop & Shop gift cards and lottery tickets. The smiles on the attendees' faces as they enjoyed their food seemed to reflect the words Catherine Kearns uttered upon her arrival. "This is one of my favorite things. I'd hate to miss it."

Liza Carens Salerno is a freelance writer and a volunteer for Cohasset Elder Affairs. At the request of Mary Hooper, whose trust is the primary benefactor to Cohasset's proposed Senior Center, the new building will be called "Willcutt Commons," after her father, Levi Lincoln Willcutt.

funding, including a debt exclusion override of about $2.5 million and $1 million of Community Preservation funding.

Yet, given the town's financial situation and many residents' strapped budgets, the possibility of getting that magnitude of a request passed at Town Meeting in the near future looked bleak.

"When we started talking to be people about money it was clear to us that public funding in the next three to five years would be nearly impossible," said Glenn Pratt, a member of the ad-hoc senior center building committee.

The Social Service League had previous demonstrated a commitment to this project. The organization pledged $1 million toward the cost of the senior center through a grant from the Mary Hooper Trust, which is administered by the League. In a 1924 will, Cohasset (summer) resident Mary Hooper listed that her number one wish was to build "an old age home" in Cohasset. She left the sum of $25,000 for that wish and over the years that amount has grown.

"(The project) is a natural fit for a long-standing wish. A town built building is not going to be done in the time it needs to be done," said Sandra Halverson, vice president of the Social Service League.

"Needs in the community (for seniors) are not being met today and to wait another three to five years is like saying no to people who deserve and need services," said John Campbell, chair of the Council on Elder Affairs.

A significant capital campaign would be undertaken by the League, in partnership with other non-profit groups such as the Friends of Elder Affairs, in order to fund the building. A capital campaign committee is being formed to raise the needed funds. A firm number of needed funds is not yet known.

Under this scenario, which was supported by the Board of Selectmen unanimously, there are several changes to the initial proposal.

First, the targeted town-owned land adjacent to the Cohasset Swim Center parking lot off Sohier Street would need to be transferred in some way to the Social Service League, either by a purchase or gift. This is further complicated by a needed land swap with the Swim Center Trust in order to create the contiguous piece of land required for the building.

Second, there will be no affordable housing units in the initial building of the project. The most recent design incorporated four affordable housing units on the second-floor of the building.

Other issues to be hammered out include establishing an operational budget for elder affairs once in the new building and creating a list of the specific needs for the senior center.

Though no firm numbers were available, Halverson, Pratt and Campbell said they expected the cost of building to be reduced if the project was done privately.

Certain state regulations that increase construction costs, including the requirement of paying contractors prevailing wage, might not be required. The savings could potentially be between 15 and 30 percent, Campbell said in a telephone interview.

Pratt stressed the project would not be done without the town's involvement. Two members of the Board of Selectmen, Diane Kennedy and Paul Carlson, would meet with the building sub-committee to figure out the many complicated issues surrounding the project at this time.

The Selectmen reacted positively to the idea as it was presented.

"This is a very exciting solution to a very vexing problem," said Selectmen vice chair Paul Carlson, adding over the past few years he has been convinced a new senior center is something the town really needs.

From the audience, Director of Elder Affairs Coral Grande thanked the volunteers and League for taking on this project.

"You have no idea how rewarding it is to sit in the audience and have people come forward to carry on the idea of a senior center," Grande said. "It just goes to show we are all in this together."

Social Service League at a glance

The Social Service League was founded in 1912 and incorporated in 1946. The founding objectives were "Cooperation for the temporal welfare of the townspeople in relieving poverty, promoting thrift, and helping those who are trying to help themselves."

Throughout its history the league has employed the town of Cohasset's nurse, a social worker and has had a board dedicated to providing programs and funding in conjunction with the schools, elder services and various community groups doing work consistent with our mission.

For decades the Social Service League operated the Cohasset Consignment Shop to raise money for its work in the community, but the shop closed its doors earlier this month.

Though based in Cohasset, the League provides services and aid to the surrounding towns of Scituate, Hingham, Norwell and Hull.

Shriners game all about winning

Cohasset's Carrier scores for South

By Bob Whitney
rwhitney@wickedlocal.com

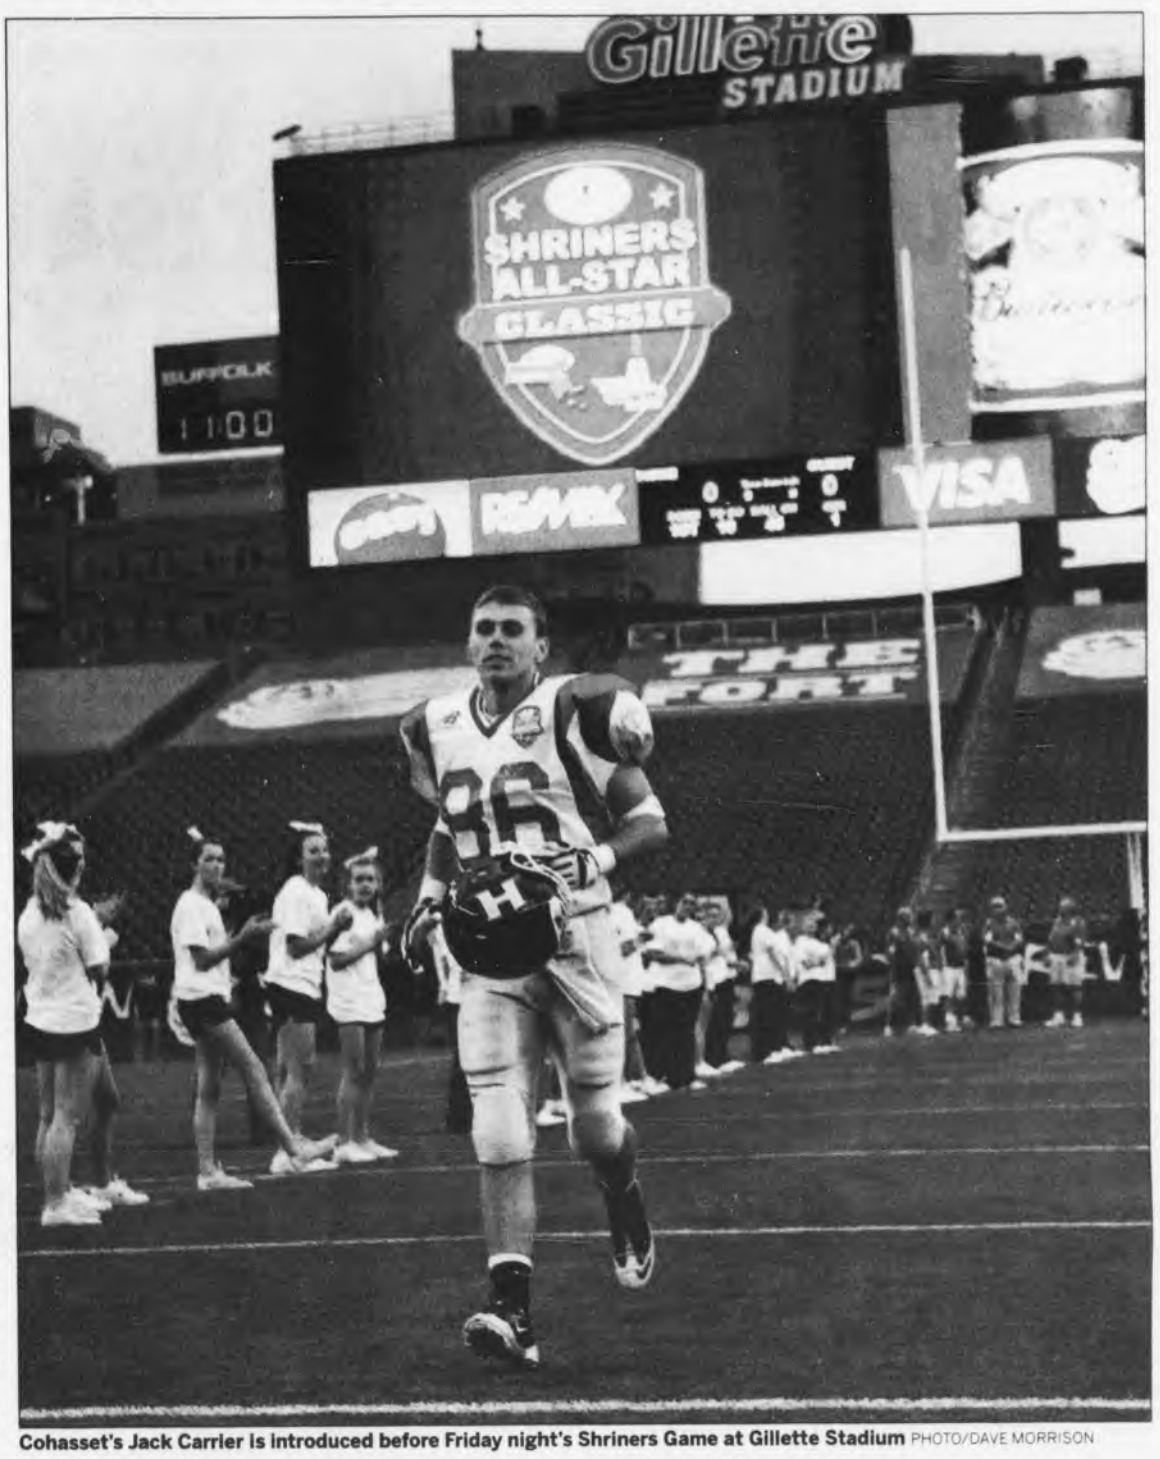
Norwell's Jim Sullivan, who retired after the 2010 football season, had his Last Hurrah as head coach of the South squad in the annual Shriners All-Star football classic at Gillette Stadium last Friday night.

Sullivan, who was once on the Cohasset coaching staff, is one of the oldest and wisest of gentlemen connected with this game and his post-game comments to reports summed it all up perfectly,.

He said their were no losers, either the South or the North. The real winner was the Shriner's Hospital and all its patients.

Another winner was Cohasset's Jack Carrier, who played for the South and caught a touchdown pass from neighbor and former Sci-Co player Tyler Park of Scituate.

The record will show that Clay Carroll of Methuen High School executed a perfect quarterback sneak with less then two minutes to go to give the North squad a well earned 17-14 victory over the South squad in the 33rd Shriners All-Star High School football game played last Friday night at Gillette Stadium.



The South squad, led by Scituate High School's talented quarterback Tyler Park, was unable to mount a drive in the games final minute and the North ended a six-year winless streak in this annual high school football classic.

The North now leads the series with an 18-15 overall record.

Rob Barrus of Weymouth had a sensational game at linebacker.

Barrus was in on numerous tackles and made a spectacular pass interception to stall a North offensive drive late in the fourth quarter.

Barrus was named the South's Outstanding Defensive Player of Game for his inspired play.

The game features 100 of the top graduating seniors from eastern Massachusetts who come together for the beneficiary of the game, the Shriners Hospital for Children, an international pediatric specialty health care system.

The game raises funds for Shriners Hospitals who then provide no charge patient care for those families and children in need of pediatric, burn, spinal cord, cleft palette and clip lip procedures.

Support from the classic has over the years have been able to help over 835,000 children.

The South was well represented by local high school football stars many of whom were playing at Gillettte Stadium for the very first time. Besides Driscoll, Harrington and Fraser, Jeff Synan from Plymouth North, Jake Golden from Hingham, Dylan Colaruso and Barrus from Weymouth, Park from Scituate, Matt Allen from Pembroke,

GOLF NOTEBOOK

USGA red-faced about low scores

PAUL HARBER

Thoughts while watching Rory McIlroy shoot 16-under make us all forget about Tiger... Who?

The USGA is taking plenty of heat because of the low scores at Congressional last week and rightfully so. There were more golfers under par than there were in the last 13 U.S. Opens combined!

And you can bet Tiger Who was salivating at home, wishing he was healthy and picking apart Congressional.

The Country Club in Brookline is one of the few clubs in Massachusetts that could host the U.S. Open, but you'll never see the National Championship return to those ancient fairways. The membership doesn't want be inconvenienced by public scrutiny, but it will host other national championships, like the U.S. Amateur, because the national eye will not be on them for those events.

Ponkapoag Golf Course in Canton, if the No. 1 track was brought to its potential, would be a place they could host a U.S. Open. But that will never happen.

I was hoping Marshfield's Geoff Sisk (77-78) or New Bedford CC's Peter Uihlein (72-78) would qualify for weekend play at the U.S. Open. But they never got on track. Maybe next year. Or next week.

Another Open

The Massachusetts Open will be played next week. It is the only MGA championship that welcomes both amateur and professional golfers to compete against each other. Inaugurated in 1905 by Donald Ross' victory at Vesper Country Club, the state open has provided some of the most defining moments in Massachusetts golf history. Notable champions of past years include Walter Hagen, Francis Ouimet, Gene Sarazen, Byron Nelson and Bob Toski.

Next week's championship will be played at Oak Hill in Fitchburg.

There are plenty of locals entered, mostly amateurs, guys like Mike Calef of East Bridgewater, Doug Clapp of Old Sandwich, Chris and Scott Congdon of Foxboro CC, Joe Harney and Joseph Frew of Granite Links, John Hadges of Thorny Lea, Mark McCormick of South Shore CC.

I'd like to see Matt Parziale of Brockton, who won the Mass. Amateur a few years ago before giving pro golf a whirl, win. But the favorite has to be defending champion Jimmy Hazen, who won last year at Wellesley CC. It's always some mini-tour pro looking for purse money and waiting for the PGA Qualifying School in the fall that wins this championship.

Stars aligned

It's nice to see that the driving range at StarLand in Hanover is open again. It might not be the best driving range in the world, but it certainly is very convenient, on Route 53, just south of the Hanover Mall. Under new management, it is opening for its 50th year of celebration. How many times did I hand my kids handfuls of coins so they could play the video games and I could hit balls?

Hoopes scores

Claude Hoopes of Marion finished second and Joe LeRoy of Hanover finished third in the PGA's New England series golf tournament at Alpine (R.I.) Country Club. Hoopes fashioned a 4-over 76, one stroke in back of winner Andrew Harvey of Boston, while LeRoy was in at 77. Steve Foley of Norwood was fourth in the net division with a 73.

In the NEPGA Pro-Officer Championship at the Carnegie Abby Club, Franklin's Anthony Maki was the winner, finishing with a 4-under 67. Tom Rooney and Chuck Mollor of LeBaron Hills CC in Lakeville tied for third with Todd Cook and Brian Callery (70) of the Milton Hoosic Club, while Beth O'Kelly and George McGoldrick of Black Rock in Hingham finished sixth with a 71.

It was good to see local pros like Mike Welch of Quincy and Jim Renner of Foxboro take time from their busy mini-tour schedule to show up and play at Wollaston Golf Club in Milton for the first James McDonough Four-Ball Invitational. James and Peggy McDonough started the tournament to remember their son, James, a promising young golfer who was killed in a tragic accident in February.

GOLFER OF THE WEEK

Trevor Bernier, MGA Links at Mamantapett

Bernier was one of 70 participants representing 47 chapters of The First Tee to be selected to play in the Nature Valley First Tee Open at Pebble Beach. This official Champions Tour event will be conducted July 8-10 and televised nationally on Golf Channel.

Bernier has been a longtime member of The First Tee of Massachusetts and just last year spent his summer volunteering at MGA Links at Mamantapett in Norton.

He was selected for this most recent honor through a process that evaluates participants' playing ability and comprehension of the life skills and character education learned through their involvement with The First Tee. More than 250 applications were submitted.

In addition to playing golf, Bernier will enjoy mingling with the Champions Tour players scheduled to play, which include World Golf Hall of Fame members Ben Crenshaw and Tom Kite, along with past champions of this unique event, Craig Stadler, Scott Simpson and Jeff Sluman, who captured the title in 2008 and 2009. Chip Beck, John Cook and fan-favorite Fuzzy Zoeller have also committed.

Clint Eastwood is chairman of the event and Arnold Palmer is honorary co-chair. Play will be conducted on Pebble Beach Golf Links and Del Monte Golf Course on Friday and Saturday, and on Pebble Beach only on Sunday.

An accomplished student-athlete at Bristol-Plymouth High School, Bernier has led his Bristol-Plymouth golf team to two undefeated seasons and two state titles. He is also president of the National Honor Society, works with the local blood drive and volunteers his time with the Special Olympics program. In 2009, he was awarded one of four Pepsi Little People's/The First Tee of Great River scholarships.

Gunnarson has game

Rusty Gunnarson of Rochester Golf Club still has game. He teamed up with John Fields of Belmont CC to win the NEPGA Pro-Pro tournament at Kirkbrae Country Club in Lincoln, R.I., last week.

Jeff Cutter of Dedham Country and Polo Club carded a 1-under par 70 to earn medalist honors at the Massachusetts Amateur Qualifying tournament at Cape Cod CC in East Falmouth last week. Others who qualified at Cape Cod from the region who will be teeing it up at Wyantenuck CC in Great Barrington July 11-15 include Jack McIntosh and Joe Fitzsimmons of Marshfield CC, the aforementioned Hoopes of Kittansett in Marion, Matt Month of the Harmon Club in Rockland, Travis Kellegrew of Bay Pointe in Onset, Kyle Harper of Segregansett and Jim D'Ambrose of Thorny Lea in Brockton.

Gatemen take time out of busy schedule to tutor young locals

By Adam K. Ellis
aellis@wickedlocal.com

WAREHAM – As the madness of the college season neared completion and the ballplayers received the call that they would indeed be spending their summer on the eastern coast playing in the most prestigious college league in the country, only the "lucky" few whose teams didn't make a run in the collegiate playoffs got a week off before setting their GPS devices for Cape Cod, Massachusetts and beginning their three-month season.

Upon arriving, each ballplayer was thrown straight into the routine of a professional athlete: breakfast, ball field, pre-game workouts, stretching, getting dressed, playing the game and setting down the field. It's a 10-hour grind that takes place for six days a week in nearly three consecutive months.

If it's tiring to read, just think what it is to live it.

Since the calendar year turned from 2010 to 11', each Gateman began the transition from winter workouts to the process of readying their bodies to take on the beating of a 35-50 game collegiate schedule that takes place over the course of three months, flying across the country, playing doubleheaders and extended road trips, only to return to study for the remaining hours left in the day, all to maintain their GPAs.

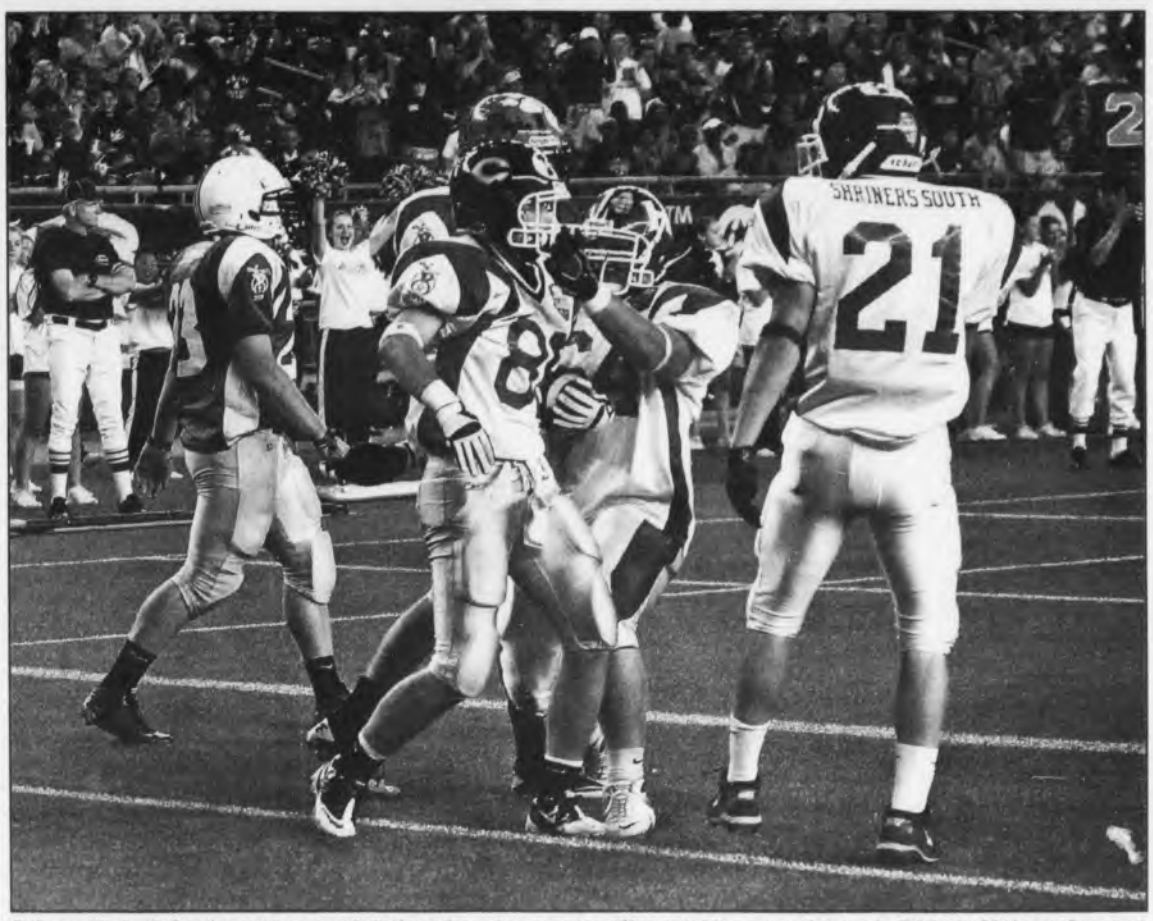
The grind is a long way away from the days of backyard wiffleball and house games where the players created their own rules and stayed out on their own accord, not out of routine, but out of pure, unadulterated desire.

Inside the grind, it can be easy for a professional ballplayer to forget that they are playing what amounts to a game – a very fun, enjoyable one. And sometimes, they need to be reminded that this is so.

On Monday afternoon, a group of Wareham Gatemen ballplayers received the fortunate call to be reminded of what the game is about: having fun.

Becoming somewhat of a custom in the past decade, the Gatemen held camp for a group of children, from beginners to advanced, kicking things off at 9 a.m with a speech to camp-attendees and accompanying parents who were in earshot, introducing themselves as Derek Dennis, Joseph Flynn, Brent Suter, Andrew Flett and Max Muncy.

Each group was ran through an introduction to fundamentals, practicing drills that included fielding groundballs and popflys, baserunning with a friendly game of Pickle that evoked a bundle of laughs and some hitting practice where aluminum bats sent a basket of tennis balls soaring deep into the bright blue morning sky.



Once the drills were complete, Flynn, Suter and Muncy took the beginners, finishing the day off talking to the group while the elder, more advanced ballplayers stayed with Dennis and Flett to playing a pair of pickup games featuring just two bases.

"It's kind of something to get your mind off things, teach the kids how to play and get some sun," returning Gatemen shortstop Derek Dennis said as he played catcher and joked with the on-deck batters. "These camps are fun but it can make long days even longer. A 12-hour day quickly turns into 14 hours. But it's all in good fun."

Sitting in the bleachers along with a few parents, long-time Gatemen volunteer Tim Mitchell was overseeing Dennis and Flett's "scrimmage" as the three-hour clinic wound down.

"It's just fun to watch...the players are really nice to the kids," Mitchell said with a smile. "It's encouraging to the youngsters who come out here and play the game, getting to hang out with some of the best college players in the country. I hope to see more as the week goes on. I know some kids are still in school."

The clinic continues until Jul. 2 and is free of charge. To find out how to sign your child up, visit http://www.gatemen-clinic.org/.

Sandlot Sluggers

The Sandlot Sluggers Summer Camp is open for kids ages 3-5. Atlantic Baseball Cub is now accepting registration for the 2011 Sandlot Sluggers Summer Indoor Baseball Camp, which will be held at The Atlantic Baseball Club in Marshfield. It will take place beginning the week of June 27 and run through Aug. 8, Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. Players may attend one day per week or the full week. The cost is $20 per day or $85 per week

2011 Summer All Sports Camp

The Atlantic Baseball Club will feature summer camps on Keene Street Field in Duxbury. The camp will have half-day and full-day programs and consist of: four fun days of sports, including football, basketball, soccer, and Olympic events; daily morning baseball games with football, basketball, and soccer in the afternoons; and experienced, professional staff with low camper-to-instructor ratio.

LIFE AT CHS

Summer's here, see you next year!

OLIVIA FRANKLIN

Welcome to summer, CHS! Finally, after what felt like the longest school year ever, we are done! I know how wonderful it felt to complete that last final and turn in that absurdly long term paper. Although it was pretty hard to get through the last few weeks of school, we did it. And now we have over two months to relax!

I hope everybody got the chance to spend some time at the Arts Festival this weekend. The weather was perfect, the food delicious, the jazz band rocking, and the art amazing. The Festival felt like a summer kick-off! (A side note: It is now officially summer since Tuesday's Summer Solstice.)

The last week of school was relatively pointless and uneventful as it usually is. I watched a total of four different movies, cooked pizzas and made strawberry shortcake, listened to music, and talked in class all week long. Productive, I know – since we were released at 10:30 in the morning, Thursday's class periods were cut down from 90 minutes to about 30, leaving no time to do anything. The year ended the same way it started – with a school wide assembly. Classic.

As for Cohasset sports, congrats to the boys baseball team for winning the State Championship for the second year in a row last week! Aside from Sixth Grade Olympic Day on Monday, nobody really used the turf this week with all spring sports' seasons completely over. See you in August, fall athletes.

Well, I guess it's a wrap-up. The 2010-2011 school year is officially over, and I hope everybody has an exciting and enjoyable summer! Spend time relaxing on the beach, sitting poolside, working, traveling, spending time with friends and family, and whatever else you feel like doing! I already can't wait for senior year. Class of 2012, can you believe it? Be back in autumn, Cohasset!

Olivia Franklin is a senior at CHS. Her column appears monthly during the school year.

Help the Food Pantry

Do you have a garden? Fresh vegetables may be left at the Food Pantry on Mondays, in a container placed outside the door. The pantry also is open to receiving vegetables and other food items on Tuesday mornings from 8:30 to 9:30a.m. Food Pantry co-director Jane Corry can arrange pick up of vegetables from anyone unable to come to the Food Pantry. Please contact the pantry at the number below for more information.

If you don't have a garden, there are other ways to help. The pantry is in constant need of donations, both monetary and food items.

Current in need food items include coffee, juice, clam chowder, corned beef hash, mayonnaise, jelly/jam, canned fruit (regular and with Splenda), spaghetti sauce, applesauce, maple syrup, cereal, dish and laundry detergent, toothpaste/toothbrushes and bar soap.

As a reminder, the pantry does not accept expired and opened products.

Donations can be dropped off at the rear entrance of St. Anthony's Rectory on South Main Street from 8:30 to 9:30 a.m. Tuesdays, at Stop & Shop or at local churches on Sundays. Donations may also be left at the St. Anthony Parish Center, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

To give a monetary donation, the food pantry mailing address is Cohasset Food Pantry, P.O. Box 297, Cohasset, MA 02025.

To contact the food pantry call 781-383-0219, ext. 25. Someone will return the call.

Cohasset Firfighters, John Martin and Joe Pergola, swing the ladder around and into position for the Deer Hill School Egg Drop.

Emily Lyons is thrilled that her egg survived the drop. Emily packed her egg in packaging that looked like a character from the game "Angry Birds."

Deer Hill fifth graders pose under the ladder of a Cohasset fire truck following their Annual Egg Drop on Thursday, June 16.

Deer Hill fifth graders, Caitlyn Marat and Kate McGowan, quickly retrieve their towel-wrapped egg and run to the table to unwrap it to see if it was intact.

Sammy Gainey and Sam Brown are happy to discover that their egg is intact after it was dropped from the top of an extended fire engine ladder. The team packed their egg inside a box encased in large sponges.

Nathaniel Purdy quickly picks up his encased egg from the drop zone and brings it to the table for inspection. His egg was intact.

CONSERVATORY NOTES

The arts can teach it all

Su D'Ambrosio

As we end another school year at SSC and send off our preschool, pre-k and kindergarten students to enjoy some summer fun, we reflect on the year and marvel at all that these young students have accomplished through participation in our arts-principled programs. We've seen very young children who entered our classroom last fall attached to their mother's leg, turn into confident, engaging students. We've seen older students discover their affinity for storytelling and illustrating. And we've seen our kindergarten students make huge strides in self expression and reading. The most amazing aspect, however, is that so much learning was achieved in an atmosphere of fun and discovery.

Many years ago when I was teaching a sixth grade general music class in Littleton, I was observed by Dr. Jon Saphier, founder of Research for Better Teaching. After the class he said something such as, "Everything that kids need to learn can be taught through music." Although I wholeheartedly agree with him, I would like to take that one step further and say that everything that kids need to learn can be taught through the arts.

We all know that babies start to explore the world through their mouths. Their tactile development allows them to grab things, but their biggest task in life so far has been to eat, so it makes sense that they see their mouths as a tool for understanding things.

Thomas Leone learns about taking turns through the arts at South Shore Conservatory's Preschool.
COURTESY PHOTO

Thankfully, they grow out of this and move on to gain coordination throughout their bodies and, for a time, freely experience the world in every way their body will allow with no inhibitions. This is the perfect time to introduce them to the arts.

Young children sing, dance, role play, paint, sculpt – all freely and without reservation. There is no sense of self-consciousness because, to them, they are the center of the universe and everyone and everything else is peripheral. Their closest connections, their parents and family, love and praise unconditionally. Young children don't judge and don't feel judged until they learn that from adults.

While children are in this magical stage, open to all possibilities, they naturally see connections between all that they are learning. Language doesn't exist in and of itself, it is part of song and story and drama and poetry. Math isn't just about numbers and learning to count, it is part of building with Legos, rhythm and baking. Science isn't a "subject" it is life itself in the garden, on the playground, in the kitchen and all around.

As these children grow and ultimately start to discover their strengths and make judgments about their abilities we hope that they will remember their early experiences and understand that they can process all that they need to learn in the way that makes best sense to them. We also hope that their early experience at SSC will stay with them and give them the confidence to keep participating in all the arts and see them as a way to express themselves throughout their lives.

There is a perception that our students are "gifted and talented" in music. Our students are gifted and talented, as all young children are, with imaginations that allow them to see a world full of music, art, movement, drama and wonder.

Assunta "Su" D'Ambrosio is the Conservatory's Director of Programs and Curriculum. Known as "Miss Su" by SSC's preschool, pre-K and kindergarten students, she is the classroom music specialist and teaches Drum and Sing! She lives in Plymouth with her husband, Bob, and her two daughters, Maria and Rosa.

Superchief Trio to kick off Friday Night Lites

Take a glance at South Shore Conservatory's performances this summer and discover a new hip vibe in its programming. SSC's Friday Night Lites series is the brainchild of some creative minds to bring new sounds in music to South Shore audiences. Throughout its 40-year history, SSC has offered jazz and rock ensembles and instruction, but never has it been the sole focus of an entire series.

"When looking at how we could expand our audience and offerings, we polled many people about what they would enjoy seeing. This series was born to satisfy the want of different," said Beth MacLeod Largent, director of performance. "From an indie singer songwriter to pop, rock, some Latin and funk – there's something for everyone. We're keeping it short and affordable – pair with a movie and you've got the perfect summer evening."

Superchief Trio will kick off the new series at 7 p.m., on July 8. For those who aren't familiar with Superchief, they are billed as the ultimate dance band. The group plays a combination of swing, New Orleans R&B, jump blues, and boogie-woogie. Superchief members have played with the Smoking Jackets, the Neo 90s Dance Band, the High Rollers, Stormin' Norman and The Hurricanes. The original trio included pianist Keith Munslow, trombonist/vocalist Pam Murray and drummer Johnny Cote, who were joined two years ago by guitarist Tom Ferraro and bassist Steve Bigelow.

Each of the one-hour FNL performances will take place outdoors in the Carr Amphitheater at One Conservatory Drive in Hingham, rain or shine. The lawn provides ample space to spread out and enjoy the atmosphere. Dancing on the lawn is encouraged.

Sponsored by Boston Private Bank and Trust Co., FNL concerts are priced at $10. Beer will be sold on site. Other performances will include alternative singer/songwriter Julia Easterlin on July 22, and a Jazz/Rock/Pop Jam on Aug. 5 featuring the conservatory's music faculty talent at their eclectic best. For tickets, visit www.sscmusic.org or call 781-749-7565, ext. 22. Tickets may be purchased on site the night of the concert.

10 TIPS FOR COMMUNICATING WITH YOUR RESIDENT CAMPER Part 2

By Bette Bussel, Executive Director, American Camp Association, New England

Just because your child is spending time away at camp doesn't mean you can't stay in touch. Parents should follow the camp's recommendations for keeping in touch. Last week, general tips 1-5 appeared in this directory. Here are tips 6-10 to help families communicate with your camper while they're having the experience of a lifetime at summer camp!

6. Participate in family visiting days - Some camps do not offer family visiting days. However, if your child's camp does offer them, it is important to participate if possible. You will enjoy seeing your child in a new setting.

7. Be sure to pack stamped and addressed envelopes and postcards - It is important for you to write to your camper, but it will be important for you to get responses as well. Try not to be discouraged by short and infrequent responses – take it as a sign that your child is having too much fun!

8. Help your child cope at camp - Help your child cope at camp - If you receive letters containing urgent pleas to come home, respond sympathetically by communicating your confidence in your child's ability to overcome homesickness. By the time you receive a letter, feelings about camp may have changed completely. Stay in touch with the adults in charge at camp so you have all the information and reassurance you need.

9. Send a reminder from home that your camper can look at or listen to - Record a message in a medium your child can listen to (tape or MP3) or allow your child to pack a favorite photo, stuffed animal or memento from home. This is a creative way for your child to feel connected to you and to life at home.

10. Continue to communicate your love and support camp In your letters be sure to talk about how proud you are of your child and how happy you are that (s)he is having such an adventure. And remember, you will have a chance to hear many camp stories when your child comes home!

SALOME'S STARS FOR RELEASE WEEK OF JULY 4, 2006

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You clever Ewes and Rams love nothing more than to rise to a challenge. So, by all means, if you feel sure about your facts, step right up and defend your side of the issue.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) You've done some great work recently. Now it's time to reward yourself with something wonderful, perhaps a day at a spa or a night out with someone very special.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) You love to talk, but don't forget to make time to do a little more listening; otherwise, you could miss out on an important message someone might be trying to send to you.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Your aspect indicates some uncertainty about one of your goals. Use this period of shifting attitudes to reassess what you really want and what you're ready to do to get it.

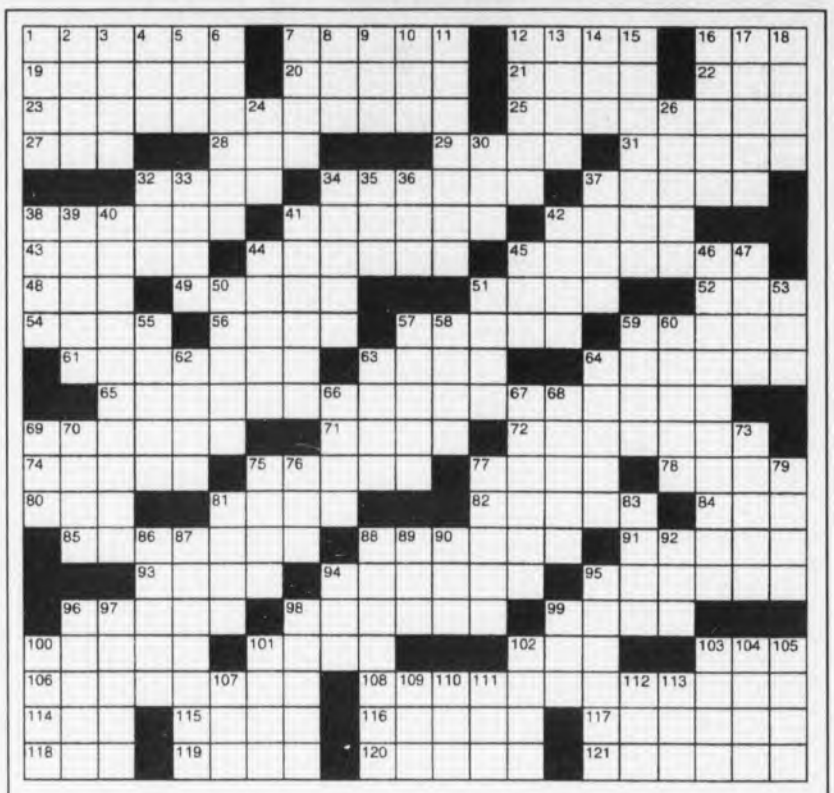
LEO (July 23 to August 22) Your social life is picking up, and you'll soon be mingling with old friends and making new ones. But 'twixt the fun times, stay on top of changing workplace conditions.

VIRGO (August 23 September 22) A trusted friend offers understanding as you vent some long-pent-up feelings. Now, move on from there and start making the changes you've put off all this time.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) You might well feel uneasy as you face a difficult situation involving someone close to you. But you know you're doing the right thing, so stick with your decision.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) You're a good friend to others. Now's the time to allow them to be good friends to you. Rely on their trusted advice to help you get through an uncertain period.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Family and friends are always important, but especially so at this time. Despite your hectic workplace schedule, make a real effort to include them in your life.



CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) That project you've been working on is almost ready for presentation. But you still need some information from a colleague before you can consider it done.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Don't let those negative attitudes that have sprung up around you drain your energies. Shrug them off, and move ahead with the confidence that you can get the job done.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Aspects favor some dedicated fun time for the hardworking Piscean. A nice, refreshing plunge into the social swim can recharge your physical and emotional batteries.

BORN THIS WEEK: You love to travel and be with people. You probably would be happy as a social director on a cruise ship.

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Avalon affordability approved

Selectmen sign regulatory agreement

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

"We've already begun marketing the affordable units and expect to have occupancy in August."
Scott Dale, Avalon

The first occupancy in the Avalon Cohasset apartment complex is nearly imminent.

The project, which has been about a decade in the making, got final approval from the town to market 55 units of affordable housing last week.

The 220-unit complex, built under Chapter 40-B, has been under construction since November, but in recent months the entrance and apartment units have begun to take shape at a rapid pace. The Avalon complex is located on King Street (Route 3A), roughly across from Good Sport.

Although only 25 percent of the units will be deemed "affordable" by state standards, because the state encourages rental housing all 220-unit will count toward the town's affordable

Where the sidewalk ends

Pedestrian access to train station still to come

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

If you want to walk to the Greenbush commuter rail Cohasset station, the option is there, but it might not be the safest route to get on the train to Boston.

As it stands right now, there is no pedestrian sidewalk access to the train station from the Cohasset.

That doesn't mean pedestrian access has not been – and still is – in the works.

In 2006, a year before the commuter rail even started running, Cohasset received a $278,800 transit-oriented district (TOD) grant from the state to build a sidewalk from intersection of North Main Street, Forest Avenue and Lower King Street, down Lower King and north of the train station on Route 3A.

The town used about half of the funding on engineering, a wetlands replication and the construction of a sidewalk on Lower King Street.

Yet, the construction of the Route 3A portion has a hit a variety of roadblocks over the past few years, culminating in 2010 with the loss of the grant due to changes in the grant's management at the state Department of Transportation.

What's left, at least for now, is a sidewalk to nowhere.

"We have every intention of building that sidewalk (on Route 3A)," said Tom Gruber, town engineer and special assistant to the Town Manager. He and Mark Brennan, also a town consulting engineer and special assistant to Town Manager, have been working on the project for years.

Circumstances, all of them beyond local control, delayed the project along the way. First, the lower King portion of the sidewalk required the replication of wetlands. A wetland was created off lower King Street with approval from the Conservation Commission. The lower King Street sidewalk was built a couple of years ago.

With the Mass Highways road-widening project on 3A the sidewalk was put off until those items were completed.

Cohasset flag returns from space

EXTRA IN YOUR MARINER

A Cohasset Flag, in all its blue and white glory, returned to safe haven at Town Hall after the trip of a lifetime. The now very special Cohasset flag went into space with Cohasset native, astronaut and Navy Captain Steve Bowen on the Atlantis shuttle in May 2010.

Bowen grew up in Cohasset and is a 1982 Cohasset High grad. He has been to space three times and went on a total of seven spacewalks to make repairs to the International Space Station.

At a recent meeting, Sons of the American Legion commander Tom Wigmore returned the flag with great fanfare to the Board of Selectmen. The flag is set to be put on display at the Town Hall, then will be given to the Historical Society for safe keeping.

Along with the flag NASA included a host of interesting numbers about its trip in space.

May 14 to 26
Dates in space (2010)

186 Number of times the flag orbited the Earth

4,879,978 Number of miles traveled

225 Maximum altitude achieved in miles

17,500 Maximum speed in space in miles per hour

11 days, 18 hours, 28 minutes, 2 seconds
Time in flight

Aquarion calls for voluntary water conservation

In the event the water demand is not reduced immediately through voluntary measures, the Company will be forced to reduce the water demand through mandatory water restrictions.

Aquarion Water Company is asking customers in North Cohasset to voluntarily reduce their water consumption. Since Memorial Day weekend the Company has experienced high water demands during the hot and dry periods. The higher demands are due primarily to watering of lawns through irrigation systems.

The Company is requesting all customers with irrigation systems, both permanent and temporary, to use water wisely. This means limiting the use of an irrigation system to no more than two days per week, before 6 a.m. and after 6 p.m., and ensuring the system is operating properly.

In the event the water demand is not reduced immediately through voluntary measures, the Company will be forced to reduce the water demand through mandatory water restrictions. The water restrictions imposed in 2010 banned the use of sprinklers and irrigation systems, and only allowed watering and outdoor water use on an odd/even basis between 6 and 9 p.m. using hand-held watering devices only.

Aquarion Water Company of Massachusetts, an Aquarion subsidiary, is the public water supply company for some 18,500 homes and businesses, including Millbury, Oxford, Hingham, Hull, and North Cohasset.

For additional information and conservation tips call the Aquarion's Customer Service Department at 1-800-928-3734, or visit www.aquarionwater.com.

ARRESTED IN COHASSET

Home invasion suspects charged

By Mary Jane Hanron
mjhanron@wickedlocal.com

"It could be said with certainty that the incident was not random."
Marshfield Police Lt. Chris Jones

According to Lt. Chris Jones of the Marshfield Police Department, it appears the home on Flaggler Drive that was the site of an alleged home invasion June 23 was targeted.

"It could be said with certainty that the incident was not random," he said.

Earlier this week, Marshfield Police Capt. Phil Tavares said the two suspects arrested faced a dangerousness hearing Wednesday, June 29, in Plymouth District Court. Steven Johnson, 31, of 36 Pearl St. in Weymouth, and Peter John, 30, of 12 Howe Circle in Randolph, were originally held at the Marshfield police station on $500,000 bail. Bail was revoked June 24, and Jones said the hearing would determine if the suspects present a danger to the public, requiring them to be held without bail for up to 90 days. (Information on the outcome of that hearing was not available by press time).

The alleged victim stated that his 2- and 7-year-old grandchildren were in the residence when two men, one wearing a ski mask and the other wearing a bandana, kicked in the front door and pointed a sawed off shotgun at them, Jones said. The man was able to get out of the house to get help as a witness on the street saw the commotion and called police.

At about 11:05 a.m., June 23, Scituate police notified the Cohasset Police Department that they were attempting to stop a 1999 Ford Ranger pickup truck traveling northbound on Route 3A. Information from Marshfield police was that the two male occupants of the pickup truck were just involved in a reported armed robbery by means of a shotgun in Marshfield.

Cohasset officers joined the pursuit on Route 3A at the Scituate town line, and the operator of the pickup allegedly continued north on Route 3A, passing the intersections of Beechwood Street and Pond Street.

Three police officers on traffic detail at the Avalon project on. Route 3A by Sohier Street were monitoring the radio transmissions. The officers were able to hold both north and south traffic on 3A, causing the pickup truck to become entangled in heavy traffic near the intersection of Route 3A and Sohier Street. When this happened, officers were able to take the suspects out of the pickup truck at gunpoint.

Marshfield charges against both John and Johnson are two counts firearm-armed home invasion, armed assault to rob, threat to commit crime, intimidating a witness, attempting to commit a crime (kidnapping), two counts assault with a dangerous weapon, possession of a sawed-off shotgun, attempt to commit masked armed robbery (marijuana), firearm-armed and masked robbery and carrying a loaded firearm.

In addition to the charges stemming from the Marshfield incident, Cohasset police will be seeking a criminal complaint on Johnson on charges of operating a motor vehicle with a revoked license, failure to stop for a police officer, operating to endanger, speeding and marked lanes violations. There were no injuries reported from the incident.

"We were monitoring this pursuit very closely, and we were happy to assist in bringing it to a safe conclusion," Cohasset Police Lt. William Quigley said. "The officers on traffic detail did a terrific job."

Jones said someone from the district attorney's office would likely reach out to the alleged victims.

"The victims were shaken. It was certainly traumatic for them," he said.

Mary Ford contributed to this story.

Beacon Rock vandalized again

By Mary Ford
mford@wickedlocal.com

A 61-year-old Cohasset man was walking on Border Street last week (Monday, June 20) when he flagged an officer down to report that the large rock near the Border Street bridge had been spray painted. Police said the graffiti is vulgar in nature.

Lt. William Quigley said this type of vandalism has happened before on Beacon Rock. Last year several Scituate teens, who had been jumping off the bridge, were found to be responsible for the vandalism and had to cover the cost of the cleanup. The rock had to be power washed.

There are no suspects currently for the new vandalism, police said.

MV crash

Sunday (June 26) at 10:15am there was a single car accident at 147 Beechwood St. A 47-year-old Cohasset man, was operating a 2003 Volvo sedan westbound on Beechwood Street reported that his car had mechanical failure (in steering) and he went off the road taking down a telephone pole.

There were no injuries reported and Beechwood Street was closed down for about two hours. This happened during the Triathlon. No citation issued.

Window broken

A 48-year-old Cohasset woman reported on Monday (June 20) that someone broke her window overnight. At 11 p.m. on Sunday (June 19) she heard a crash but did not investigate until the next afternoon when she found her outside storm window broken; there was broken glass and brick on the patio, police said.

Towed

A 20-year-old Cohasset man was cited for driving an unregistered motor vehicle at 7:30 a.m. on Tuesday (June 21), which carries a $100 fine. Police stopped the 2003 Toyota Sequoia on King Street near Good Sport for having an expired registration. The vehicle was towed.

Bad check

Cohasset police referred the investigation on the passing of a bad check at a Cohasset business on Wednesday (June 22) to the Taunton Police Department. The check was drawn on a closed account at a Taunton bank, police said.

Mailbox

A 46-year-old King Street man heard a loud bang, looked out and saw, a dark-colored SUV with a teenager outside hitting his mailbox with a piece of wood last Thursday (June 23) at about 10:41 p.m.. The SUV took off. That night police had several more calls about the vehicle which was reported as being either a black Suburban or Tahoe that was speeding around with the occupants getting out and running through yards. Police have no real suspects at this time.

Expired license

A 31-year-old Cohasset man, who was operating a 2003 Dodge pickup northbound on Main Street by Depot Court at 9 p.m. on Friday (June 24) is being summonsed for unlicensed operation after a registry check revealed his license had expired. Police said the man explained he had not renewed his license because he had not had the chance to clear up some outstanding tax issues related to his business.

Bike tour

Police said this year's Bike MS Cape Cod Getaway had about 2500 participants which is double last year's number. The tour started in Boston at 7 a.m. on Saturday (June 25) and passed through Cohasset on its way to Provincetown. Two of the participating bicyclists, one of whom was transported to the hospital, fell off their bikes.

The Multiple Sclerosis Society hired four detail officers but it was not nearly enough as the event was a lot bigger. There were several complaints from residents who could not get out of their driveways and two women went to the station to complain and suggest the entire route should have been blocked off.

Police Lt. William Quigley said the race became unwieldy and they would be revisiting the issue with the MS society next year to make sure there is more help.

Sideswiped

A police sergeant's 2008 Ford pickup truck was damaged when a 63-year-old driver, who lives in the Harborview Apartments, in a 2001Ford Focus was distracted and sideswiped the rear of the truck on Sunday (June 26). There were no tows and no citations; the insurance companies are handling it, police said.

Egg thrown

A Jerusalem Road resident complained that an egg was thrown at her window on Sunday (June 26); she said there was a similar incident last week. Police have no suspects but will assign extra patrols.

Familiar face for temporary role

Jennifer Oram takes on role of interim town manager

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

"I'm excited and truly honored to be asked to do this job."
Jennifer Oram, interim town manager

As of July 1, Cohasset will have a new interim town manager, but it is someone who many residents will recognize.

Jennifer Oram, administrative assistant in the Town Manager's office, will see the town through this month without a permanent Town Manager. Oram has worked for the town for nearly six years.

"I'll be here to answer questions for the public and I have great resources to turn to as well," Oram said. "I'm excited and truly honored to be asked to do this job."

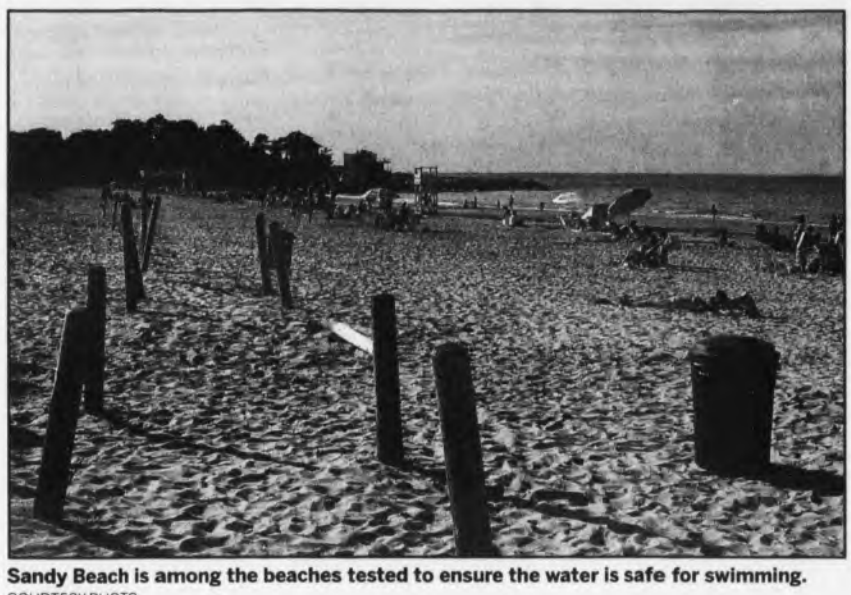
The Board of Selectmen voted unanimously to have her assume the position of interim town manager effective July 1.

"We felt very comfortable with (Oram); she's very capable and I feel very strongly she's the right person for the job," said Ted Carr in an interview. Oram will receive a stipend for the extra workload over the course of the next month.

Steve Lombard, who has served as the town's interim town manager since November, resigned effective June 30. Former Town Manager Bill Griffin retired from municipal management in October to pursue a career opportunity in the private sector. Griffin hired Oram as his administrative assistant in 2005.

The Board of Selectmen's choice for the next town manager, Michael Coughlin, will begin on August 1. He is wrapping things up at his current position as the town administrator in Westport, Mass.

Oram will handle the day-to-day issues of the Town Manager's office for the month of July. She is familiar with nearly all the issues facing the Board of Selectmen as she attends all their meetings as secretary for the board.



Both Coughlin and Lombard will be coming in to Town Hall during the month of July to ease the transition between town managers.

In addition to her duties in the Town Manager's office, Oram has served as the secretary for the Zoning Board of Appeals for more than five years.

'Perfect' beaches in Cohasset

Water quality has been consistently good this summer

Sandy Beach is among the beaches tested to ensure the water is safe for swimming.
COURTESY PHOTO

What is it
The Board of Heath takes water samples each Tuesday to ensure the ocean water is safe for swimming. If tests reveal a one-time "spike" of more than 104 colonies of enterococci per 100 milliliters of water beaches are closed or a geometric mean over 35 colonies of enterococci spread over a five week period. Weekly testing is in its third week.
"The results have been absolutely perfect so far," said Tara Tradd, health inspector. "This week especially the beaches looked beautiful."

Beaches tested
Bassing Beach (from the Sailing Club dock), the Yacht Club, Sandy Cove, Sandy Beach, Little Harbor (near Cunningham Bridge) and Black Rock beach are tested weekly during the summer.

Process
Tradd takes water samples in a sterile cup on Tuesday morning. In addition to collecting the water samples, she takes the water temperature and anything out of the ordinary like birds, jellyfish, boats, swimmers and seaweed are noted as they may or may not impact the results. The samples are then sent to the G&L Laboratories in Quincy where they are analyzed. The results are reported back on Wednesday afternoon around 3:30p.m. If any of the beaches have high results, Tradd goes out to the beach to post a closure and re-samples the water.

Health effects
Swimming in polluted waters can cause beach goers to get sick. The most common health effects related to swimming in polluted waters could include ear infections, conjunctivitis and rashes. The most common ailment is gastro-intestinal disorders, stemming from swimmers swallowing the water.

This week's results

Results indicate the number of colonies of enterococci per 100 milliliters (cfu/100mL).

Bassing Beach/Sailing Club	<10
Yacht Club	<10
Sandy Cove	<10
Little Harbor	10
Sandy Beach	<10
Black Rock Beach	<10

Partnership with CSCR
Students at the Center for Student Coastal Research are also collecting samples and testing for water quality. They compare their results weekly with those from the state lab results.

Where to find the results
The results are posted every Wednesday afternoon on the Department of Public Health's website (www.mass.gov/dph). Testing results for all sampling stations are available on the Department of Public Health website dating back to the summer of 2002. If the water is unsafe for swimming flags are posted at Sandy Beach (red flag) and in the harbor (yellow flag), both flags have a crossed out swimmer on them.

Cat Dam NOI is not wetlands restoration

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

"By intent and design this is not a restoration or enhancement project."
George Chamillard, Environmental 20

The Environmental 20 group came forward once again to the Board of Selectmen requesting a change to the Cat Dam Notice of Intent currently before the Conservation Commission.

Although the change seems minor – a box checked to indicate the project involves wetlands restoration or enhancement – representatives from the group were on hand to push for the change. As has been the typical routine with this controversial issue other neighborhood dwellers spoke against making the change.

A Notice of Intent (NOI) is a presentation of information to the Conservation Commission that addresses the operation and maintenance of the tide gates, among other things. The Conservation Commission reviews the information and ultimately determines the operational schedule and management of Cat Dam in accordance with the Clean Waters Act.

The next, and likely final, public hearing on the Cat Dam NOI is scheduled for Thursday, July 7 at 7p.m.

At a special meeting called for 5:30p.m. on Tuesday, George Chamillard, a representative of the neighborhood group the Environmental 20, said the request was a "correction" to the application. The Environmental 20 paid for the study that supports the current NOI before the Conservation Commission. The Board of Selectmen accepted their proposal as their NOI submission several months ago.

A box indicating whether the NOI was a wetlands restoration/enhancement project was checked on the town's first NOI submittal back in the fall and carried over into the new application submitted early this year.

"By intent and design this is not a restoration or enhancement project," Chamillard said.

Fellow Environmental 20 member Richard Cate said the application should have been looked at more carefully.

"To my knowledge this has never been called a restoration project," Cate said.

Later in the meeting, Chamillard said because of the wetlands restoration/enhancement box being checked several state and federal agencies commented on the project using that lens. Many of comments received from the agencies disagreed with the schedule, many of them calling for increased flushing between Little Harbor and inner Little Harbor.

One of the side effects of increased flushing is more time where inner Little Harbor is uncovered, which causes a strong odor throughout the inner Little Harbor neighborhood, neighbors have said.

The NOI sets forth a new operations and maintenance plan for the tide gates, which are located on Nichols Road. One of the effects of the new operations and maintenance plan, the application says, is increased flushing and the potential for better water quality in inner Little Harbor.

For that reason, Steve Brown of Jerusalem Road spoke in favor of keeping the box checked.

"The modifications to the operations and maintenance schedule increase tidal flushing and thereby improve water quality. It's clearly the intent to enhance the wetland," Brown said.

Conservation Commission member Debbie Cook said there was some difference in opinion among the Conservation Commission over the importance of the box.

"There is not consensus among the board that the box is not important," Cook said. During deliberation, the Conservation Commission will need to decide whether this box being unchecked changes the way the application is evaluated.

Marjorie Brown, also of Jerusalem Road, asked the Selectmen to consider the origin of this whole issue with Cat Dam.

"It was a group of neighbors who came forward concerned about the health of inner Little Harbor. The big intent is improving the health of the water and the environment," Marjorie Brown said.

Karen Quigley, former selectmen, said both sides have said they are interested in improving the environment of the area.

"Why not do anything we can to improve the water quality in inner Little Harbor?" Quigley asked, adding the selectmen should base their decision on what's best for the town and its residents as a whole.

Selectmen Paul Carlson said there have been many arguments for taking an "incremental approach" to improving the area.

"There are so many moving parts," Carlson said. "I think it's premature to call this a restoration project."

He said the issue could always be re-visited if improvements aren't seen in the water quality after the changes to the operational schedule, Little Harbor sewer project and newly installed raingardens.

The Board of Selectmen voted 4 to 1, with chair Ted Carr opposing the change to the checked box.

The Board also voted to change the contact name on the application to Selectmen chair Ted Carr as interim Town Manager Steve Lombard, whose name was on the application, will no longer be working for the town as of July 1.

Once the public hearing on the Cat Dam NOI closes, the Conservation Commission has 21 days to issue a decision. The next public hearing is Thursday, July 7 at 7p.m.

AVALON

housing percentage.

Chapter 40-B allows developers to skirt local zoning regulations in exchange for providing affordable housing in municipalities that fall below the 10 percent "affordability" threshold.

Cohasset has hovered around 3 percent affordable housing stock for decades. With Avalon's 220 units, the town will likely meet the 10 percent affordable housing threshold required by state law.

A 27-page document sets out the regulations that will govern the affordable units. Twenty-five of the affordable units will be one-bedroom and 30 will be two-bedroom units.

"We've already begun marketing the affordable units and expect to have occupancy in August," said Scott Dale, Avalon vice president of development and project manager for Avalon Cohasset.

In order to be eligible for the affordable units, the maximum allowable annual income is $45,100 for one person; $51,550 for two people; $58,000 for three people, and $64,400 for four people.

The affordable rate rent for a one bedroom is $780 (after utility adjustment) and for a two bedroom $995 (after utility adjustment).

Affordable units will be available at every phase of occupancy as the development is built out.

Sidewalks

The Board of Selectmen still has one outstanding issue with the Avalon developers. When Avalon was issued a comprehensive permit it came with extensive conditions. Among the conditions was the construction of two sets of sidewalks, one along Route 3A and the other up Sohier Street.

"We want to do something that makes sense for the town and for us," Dale said.

A walk-thru of the area back in 2009 pushed the Selectmen to rule out the Sohier Street sidewalk option, though no official vote was taken on the issue.

Foreseeing potential issues with the sidewalk construction, the ZBA decision included a stipulation allowing the two sidewalks and other street improvements to be monetized. If a sidewalk on Sohier Street was not built, the town would get $100,000. If a sidewalk on Route 3A and a signal at Sohier Street did not happen, the town would received $250,000. It's up to the town which route they want to take.

"We're willing to put the money toward whatever the town wants," Dale said.

Selectman Leland Jenkins said the town should construct the sidewalk from Avalon to Sohier Street because of the potential they will be used by schoolchildren.

"The town is going to get stuck doing this work," Jenkins said.

Dale said it was determined a couple of years ago that for the smaller children going to Osgood and Deer Hill the distance was not a walkable distance, adding there was still time to decide.

"Let's let the dust settle literally and figuratively before re-visiting that issue…we still understand our obligation," Dale said.

In addition to constructing the driveway and other Route 3A streetscape improvements, Avalon is removing at least one of the two derelict buildings on the property adjacent to the Avalon driveway. Avalon does not own the property, but they worked out an agreement with the owner to demolish one of the buildings.

SIDEWALK

Then, Mass Highways mistakenly placed a guardrail near where Mathnasium is located right in the path of the to-be-built sidewalk. Gruber and Brennan had to work to get it moved to the correct location.

"Theoretically at that point we were able to run the sidewalk down 3A. All the engineering was done," Gruber said.

Although the town thought they had a valid permit for the project, meaning all the issues had been vetted, in early 2010 Mass Highway said they had some outstanding questions that had not been addressed.

"As a result we had to do some new drawings and engineering," Gruber said.

As Gruber and Brennan waited to hear feedback on the new drawings more bad news came in.

The way the Department of Transportation handles grants and grant applications was changing. All grants, including Public Works Economic Development (PWED) and transit-oriented district (TOD), had to be applied for under one application. Outstanding grants, like the town's TOD grant for the sidewalks, have to be reapplied for. According to Gruber, there was about $140,000 left in the grant award.

"The ground rules keep changing, through no fault of our own," Gruber said.

Gruber and Brennan plan to reinitiate the grant for the next round of funding this fall. A PWED grant for improvements in the downtown area is also being sought.

They will likely need more than $140,000 to complete the sidewalk due to escalation in construction costs.

"We are hoping that for (what were) active grants the reapplication process is more of a formality than anything else," Gruber said.

The sidewalk to the train station has been discussed before at length. In 2008, Cohasset resident Howie Altholtz asked the selectmen to reconsider the pedestrian access to the train station and instead construct the sidewalk on North Main Street.

Wetlands issues and a narrow road made this sidewalk option an expensive proposition and the effort never went very far.

BRIEFLY

Red Lion Inn outside patio

The Red Lion Inn was recently serving alcohol on their outside patio to take advantage of the summer weather. The problem is they are not licensed to serve liquor out there.

"That area is not licenses to serve alcohol or have entertainment," said Jennifer Oram, administrative assistant to the Town Manager at a recent meeting of the Board of Selectmen. The Selectmen serve as the town's liquor licensing authority.

The Red Lion was put on notice that they need to file an extension of license in order to serve liquor on the porch. Liquor licenses are granted for very specific premises.

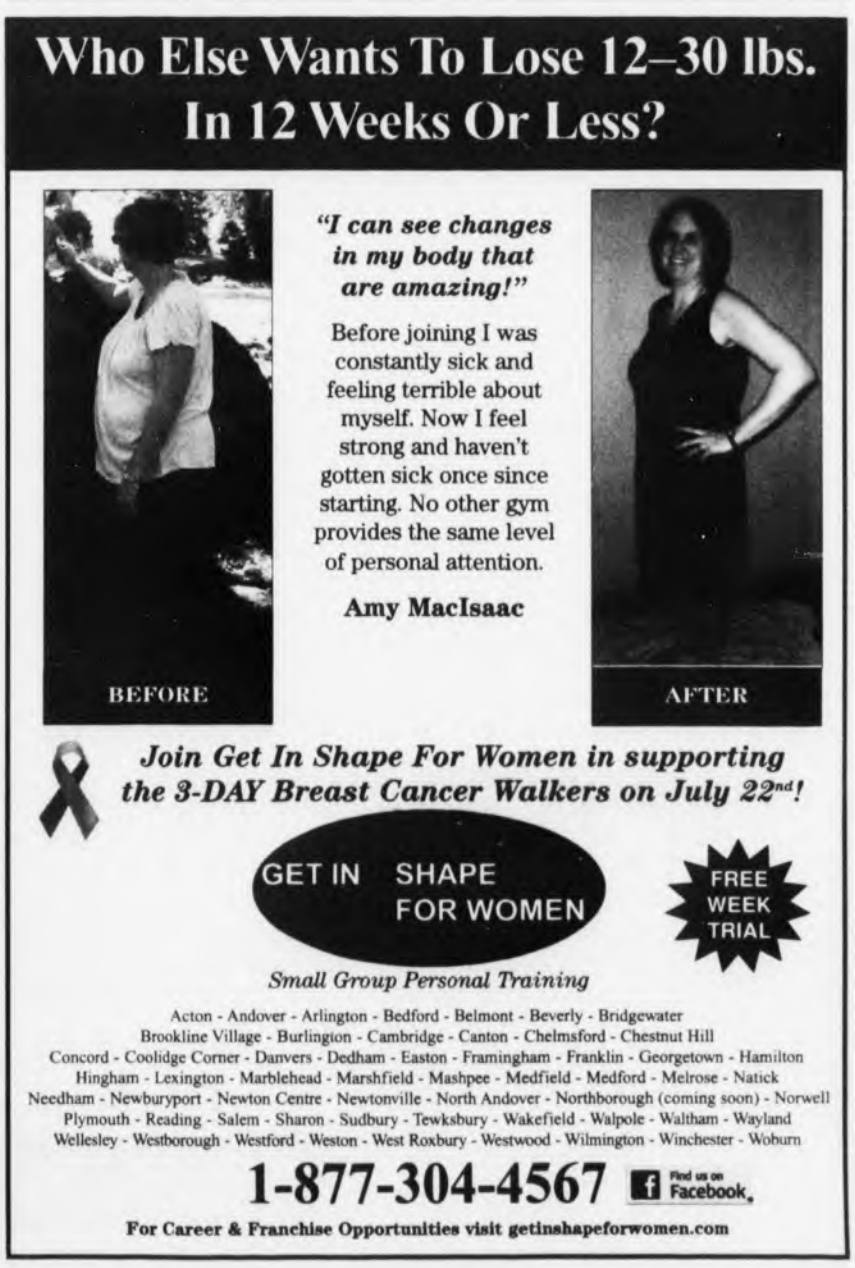
"It's going to take time to do the extension; they are not going to be able to do in time for this summer," Oram said.

Oram has done extensive research into the Red Lion's liquor license going back more than a decade. She suggested the Selectmen review the conditions of the license with the Red Lion Inn management to ensure everything is in order.

The Selectmen will revisit the issue when the license is submitted to the town.

Hearing on proposed water rate hike

The turnout for the Department of Public Utilities June 28 hearing in Hingham on Aquarion Water Company's proposed $2.8 million rate hike wasn't large, but those who took the time to attend and to air their views spoke out strongly against any such increase.



The average ratepayer increase in Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset, which Aquarion serves, would be about $10 a month, or a 16.5 percent hike.

There was never a dull moment during the hearing, with the audience applauding enthusiastically after each speaker, all of whom opposed the proposed increase.

Key to the discussion was why Aquarion is seeking an 11 percent shareholder return – many times greater than the current rate of inflation – and why ratepayers should be paying for Aquarion's legal costs in an as yet unresolved case involving Oxford town officials' attempt to take over the water company in that community, which Aquarion is opposing.

A second DPU (evidentiary) hearing will be held in Boston this fall.

FARMERS MARKET

the Farmers' Market is place where families can spend the day, plan a dinner of fresh vegetables and listen to smooth music.

"There's something about being on the common in Cohasset; it's just a beautiful setting," said Tina Watson, one of the long-time organizers of the market. "We were the only farmers' market around for years and years, now every town has one."

Being one of the pioneers of the Farmers Market concept on the South Shore is "a little feather in our cap," Watson said.

One of the challenges of the market for the organizers is creating balance and diversity to the vendors.

"We've opened it up a little bit to different types of vendors, but we don't want it to turn into a craft show," Watson said.

Keeping the sanctity of the market could be what ensures its annual success. Though much of the market's attendance depends on the weather, the vendors are there no matter what.

One of the special facets of the market is the live music. One of the veteran Farmers Market performers is Ray Papile, a guitarist and singer. He plays oldies, but goodies, to bring a nostalgic feel to the market.

"There's something about being on the common in Cohasset; it's just a beautiful setting."
Tina Watson

"I play the Eagles, the Beatles and it seems to keep the crowd happy," Papile said. Like a scene straight out of Americana, kids will often kids will dance on the green lawn of the common.

"People just hang out there, they come and they are there for the day," Papile said, who makes the rounds to several other local farmers' markets throughout the summer.

"The setting is beautiful and it's nice to play outdoors," he said. The renovated Meetinghouse Pond is sure to be an attraction as well.

One of Papile's favorite vendors is Cohasset's own certified organic farm, Holly Hill Farm.

Holly Hill has been a signature vendor at the market since 2000. Although they have been invited to other local markets, Cohasset's is the only one they commit to each year. (They also have a farm stand at the farm on Jerusalem Road.)

"We are a community-focused local organic farm and we want to participate in as many local events as possible," said Cindy Prentice, farm manager. "Over the years we've developed wonderful friendships with people and the other farmers. It's nice to be a part of a larger farm family."

The Cohasset market also allows the farm to bring their produce to market without traveling many miles, playing into the goal to be as friendly to the environment as possible.

"We can drive two miles (back and forth) – I'd say that's pretty local!" Prentice said, adding many families come to buy fresh ingredients for that night's supper.

While the market has expanded over the years to include not only garden vegetables, but also homemade sweets and handmade crafts, Holly Hill provides nutritional balance, Prentice said.

Although the cool and rainy spring has gotten the crops off to a tough start, Prentice is predicting a strong crop, some of which is already ripe.

"Now that we're getting a nice good old-fashioned summer weather, we're looking forward to a great growing season," Prentice said. Snap peas, turnips and organic flowers are just some of the Holly Hill's goods available now.

Starting last year, Holly Hill has created some competition for itself. The non-profit arm of the farm, Friends of Holly Hill Farm, runs educational programs throughout the year. One of their summer programs is "Market Gardeners." Under the direction of Jon Belber, education director, the kids, ages nine to 12, plan, plant, care for, harvest and prepare the goods for market. The Market Gardeners bring their goods, which are grown in the education garden and are grown naturally, but are not certified organic, to market every Thursday. Look for the group at a separate table from Holly Hill Farm.

"The thing is when people go the Farmers Market they're happy and we're happy to be there," Prentice said.

The Farmers Market happens Thursday afternoons from mid-June to mid-October from 2 to 6p.m.

Bound by rock and roll

Legendary drummer and resident put on rock show

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

"The music we're playing is very cutting edge and contemporary. There's no glitz; we play straight from the gut rock and roll."
Corky Laing

In 1969, Cohasset resident Howie Altholtz — at 15 years old — attended Woodstock the now iconic three-day concert in the middle of nowhere New York.

On stage at one point during that pivotal rock and roll weekend was a drummer just gaining a foothold in the music industry. Corky Laing, then in his early 20s, took the stage as the drummer in the band Mountain at Woodstock – and shortly after the concert became their full-time man on the drum kit.

About 30 years later these two men crossed paths once again through mutual friends. They both saw eye-to-eye creatively and, as these kind of rock and roll stories go, ended up making music in Cork County, Ireland under the band name Cork. Altholtz helped to produce the album.

On Saturday, July 7 the pair will reunite once again to entertain an audience at the C-Note in Hull. Altholtz, along with his band howieHowie, is opening the show and Laing, with his new band, Corky Laing and the Memory Thieves, is set to close down the house.

In a recent phone interview, Laing said he is looking forward to returning to Massachusetts because of many memories – and music – he created within its borders.

"Nantucket is my old stomping ground...I love and respect Massachusetts for a lot of things," Laing said, including the Boston Bruins' recent Stanley Cup win, which is a lot coming from a Montreal native.

Laing wrote several of his most well-known Mountain songs right here on the island including, "Mississippi Queen" and "Nantucket Sleigh Ride"

"A lot of good things happened in Nantucket," Laing said.

The rockers are amped up to be together on the same ticket and share a friendship based on their love of rock music.

"We've always been bound by rock," Altholtz said. The pair have played together locally before at the Scituate Heritage Days.

The night of entertainment on July 7, the pair said, will be full of energy and passion for rock and roll. The music will match the setting.

"The C-Note is an earthy, legitimate, authentic pure rock and blues club," Altholtz said. He credits the location with true rock and roll spirit as they bring local music all year long, in spite of the winter weather.

"We're going to fill the place with real, authentic rock," Altholtz promises.

Laing is joined by a group of musicians he calls some of the best he's played with including, Josh Horton on guitar, Matt Read on guitar, Bonnie Parker on bass, Denny Colt on guitar. All members sing as well.

"We have all original material that we've been working on for close to a year," Laing said. Of course, they will play his biggest hits from former groups (Mountain and Bruce, West & Laing), but in their own style. Many of those hits were written in Massachusetts, so they'll have special meaning to once again be played in the state.

"The music we're playing is very cutting edge and contemporary. There's no glitz; we play straight from the gut rock and roll," Laing said.

For Laing, he has always looked to surround himself with talented individuals – and he credits that with getting him at the forefront of rock as it was exploding in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

As the youngest of five kids he says he started playing the drums, loudly, just to get noticed by his dad. For his Bar Mitzvah he received bongo drums.

"The smartest thing my dad said to me was if you want to do something, do it in front of people that know their stuff. That way you'll know if you're good or not," Laing said. He headed from his birthplace of Montreal to New York City to get in front of a lot of people who knew good music.

"You are you are with," Laing said. In order to get a leg up in the one of the coolest industry going in the late 1960s, Laing said he was a "pro-active groupie." Any musician he liked he would try to get in front of them.

That type of attitude and perseverance gained him a place in the band Mountain.

Since that time he has shared the stage with scores of musicians in various bands, but he said the Memory Thieves are as good as any he's played with before.

Laing is looking forward to hooking up with Altholtz and his band.

"It's going to be great playing with them – they're nuts and all need therapy!" he quipped.

For more information about the C-Note, located at 159 Nantasket Ave., or the concert, see www.cnotehull.com. The show starts on Saturday, July 7 at 9p.m. with Echo the Silence, howieHowie will play at 10p.m. and Corky Laing and the Memory Thieves will begin their set around 11p.m. Tickets will be available at the door or online in advance.

As the school year comes to a close, The Cohasset Education Foundation would like to thank everyone in the community for their extraordinary support. As of June 30, 2011, the CEF has raised over $1.2 million and has awarded nearly $560,000 in grants to the schools. Your donations have allowed the Endowment Fund to reach over $475.000.

This academic year alone your generosity allowed for installation of 30 Net Books at the Deer Hill School and 32 new classroom computers at the Osgood School. These grant awards were made possible by your overwhelming support and participation during our Annual Appeal Donor Match Campaign, Spelling Bee and Spring Gala. Through all of these events your involvement has not only enhanced the educational experience for ALL students in the Cohasset Public Schools but has helped to build community for our kids, our town and our future.

For more information about the CEF or to get involved please visit www.cohasseteducation.org. thank you!

OUR VIEW

K-9 scrutiny

We are not blaming the Advisory Committee for doing what they are supposed to do: scrutinize expenditures and look at all the potential financial impacts.

But we are disappointed that Selectmen felt compelled to get a "second opinion" on the addition of a K-9 unit to the Cohasset Police Department when so little has been examined in terms of regionalized dispatch – which represents a major change in the way public safety dispatch is handled.

Once the K-9 proposal was sent to the other committees (it also went before the Capital Budget Committee) — it was bound to get sidelined. The recommendation now is to put the K-9 proposal (which police want to fund privately) before the town as a budget item for fiscal 2013.

We can only hope Selectmen will weigh the advice of the Advisory Committee but move ahead with — what, in our view — is a win-win for the police and the town.

We attended the "Touch a Truck" event in Scituate on Sunday that included a K-9 demonstration with Officer Brian McLaughlin and Felix. Hundreds watched in awe as Officer McLaughlin put Felix through his paces. It was a super PR event for Scituate police.

But community relations and PR are only part of the benefit of a K-9 unit. Police K-9s can save lives, find the "bad guys" and find illegal drugs. If a K-9 helps find even one lost person with Alzheimer's – the dog has proved its worth.

Here we have an enthusiastic police force ready to welcome a K-9 unit and find a way to pay for it without taxpayer dollars. We think allowing the K-9 plan to move ahead would be a good morale boost for the CPD. If a way to fund the unit privately can be established, why not allow it?

The K-9 unit would be an important but relatively simple addition to the tools the police now have.

But we continue to question why the extra scrutiny over the K-9 proposal and very little public discussion on whether regionalized dispatch is going to be a good thing for Cohasset.

We are still unclear how much money is going to be saved with regionalized dispatch and how our police station is going to work during the evening and overnight hours with a "safe area" for pedestrian access. Residents need to be aware there will no longer be a public safety dispatcher on duty at our police station. How is regionalizing dispatch is going to improve safety in Cohasset?

Will the regionalized center come with its own bureaucracy? Who is going to run the center and what is that person going to be paid? Can the town get out of the dispatch center if it turns out not to be a good thing for Cohasset?

The meetings for regionalized dispatch have not been public to our knowledge. We cover both Hingham and Cohasset and have never seen a meeting of the regionalized dispatch group (South Shore Regional Emergency Communications Center, dubbed SSRECC – pronounced "Schreck") publicly posted. We have no idea what was discussed at those meetings and how the entire process has unfolded.

The grant money being offered for regionalization was a big motivator behind the move to regionalized dispatch. What happens when that money dries up?

Too bad, that Cohasset's financial boards did not get a chance to determine what the financial benefits are for Cohasset weighed against quality-of-life issues in terms of station manning and local dispatch. It would have been nice to have them at the table looking out for our interests from the start for this major change.

We think Selectmen, at the very least, should have dug into the regionalized dispatch proposal themselves and sent it to the Advisory Committee for their input.

We also think Selectmen should move ahead with the police K-9 request.

'Our dear friend, fellow trustee'

The Board of Trustees of South Shore Conservatory observes with sadness the passing of Eric Oddleifson, our dear friend and longtime fellow trustee. A gifted musician, a man of business and a committed community leader, Eric was an articulate advocate for the arts. His passion and his persistence were boundless, as was his drive to see the arts play their rightful role in the basic curriculum and the educational experience of every student.

In his years as a trustee, volunteer and benefactor, Eric gave mightily of himself to the Conservatory. We note with enduring gratitude the unique part Eric played so many years ago in drawing together a diverse group of arts educators and leaders in a symposium that not only examined the value of arts education, it galvanized our board's commitment to our school's mission and formed a critical component in the founding of our Duxbury campus, the Ellison Center for the Arts.

For his devotion to the arts and music and his dedication to the Conservatory, the Trustees of South Shore Conservatory express our gratitude for the life of Eric Oddleifson and extend our condolences to Janna and to Eric's children and grandchildren. We have lost a true and a gifted friend.

Michael J. Puzo for the Trustees of the South Shore Conservatory

Eric Oddleifson will be missed

I am so grateful for Eric Oddleifson's brilliant participation in the South Shore Jet Pollution Council, and I keep encountering friends who have a parallel gratitude for his weight in entirely different campaigns, equally large, equally farseeing. Eric had an artist's gift of seeing a vision whole and confidently deploying the materials to put it into the world. I assume that is how he knew the urgency of seeing as an artist in the course of one's education. Eric was such an exemplary citizen, I wish a pattern could be made from his life, but who could touch it? Mary Ann Frye, Hingham

Festival was a team effort

South Shore Art Center wishes to thank the community of Cohasset for providing us with such a beautiful space for our arts festival —this year our 56th. We are grateful for the support from the Town and its residents: special thank yous to Jennifer Oram, Sgt. Quigley and Chief DeLuca, and everyone at the Town Hall, DPW and Police and Fire Departments who make our jobs that much easier.

Special thanks to Diane Kennedy and Tim Waite, who both beautifully managed the massive operational aspects of Festival and Alice Sloan who organized the volunteers.

Thanks to all our sponsors: Audi Norwell, Porsche Norwell, Image Resolutions, The Cook Estate, Dean & Hamilton, Roomscapes, Hingham Institution for Savings, South Shore Music Circus, Conway Insurance, Hingham Mutual Fire Insurance, King Jewelers, Atlantic Bagel, Graham Waste, Goodwin Graphics and many more.

Jazz Reception sponsors included Boston Private Bank, Atlantica Restaurant, Ava Cucina, Bia Bistro, Curtis Liquors, Elise Russo, Raina Elfner, Valerie & Phillip Vitali, Bruce & Lois Cameron, Lauren Farrell, Linda Gardner, Frank & Judy Neer, and Lisa O'Connor.

Finally, a hearty thank you to the many volunteers, the energetic youth crew, and the Art Center staff who kept things running smoothly throughout the weekend. Sarah Hannan, South Shore Art Center

Water users need to pay up ASAP

As we come to the end of FY11, the receivables owed to the Cohasset Water Department for the current year has reached a new high. From a Treasurer's report dated 6/21/2011, the outstanding balance for this year alone is over $438K.

This figure only represents the delinquent amounts from the beginning of this Fiscal Year that the ratepayers have not paid for the water and services received. The $438K does not include $164K in the delinquent amounts for sewer payments. Combined the ratepayers owe $602K for water and sewer services for FY11.

Since these departments project their expenses around estimated income, it makes it very difficult to estimate budgets and pay bills when the income due does not get paid timely. Being a municipality, any unpaid bills must come before town meeting for payment. Amounts received after the end of the Fiscal year do not get credited to the year for which they were billed.

As part of the town, both Water and Sewer have payments go through the Town Treasurer who keeps track of delinquent bills. After the end of the Fiscal Year, unpaid amounts are put on a tax lien the following December and sent out with the Real Estate tax bills due Feb 1.

The ratepayers who choose to remain delinquent end up hurting their neighbors because without paying their fair share when billed, sometimes monies must be borrowed or rates increased to cover the short fall or maintenance must be deferred.

For those who owe the $602K, please send your payments to the Town Treasurer immediately, as our books will be officially closed on July 15. Lee C. Jenkins, Water Commissioner

MBTA GIVES GO-AHEAD FOR

Parking fines grace period

Last week commuters who use the commuter rail and commuter boat were notified that the surcharge for failure to pay for parking at MBTA lots would be increased from $1 to $21. Citing the inability to deter commuters from not paying, and the backlog of unpaid fines that is in excess of $1 million, the MBTA felt this increase was necessary and critical.

After hearing about this proposal from countless commuters and from the MBTA, State Rep. Garrett Bradley and state Sen. Robert Hedlund sent a joint letter to General Manager Richard Davey asking him to agree to a 72-hour grace period before the $20 additional surcharge goes into effect to allow commuters to make a payment. Under this plan, commuters will still be charged a surcharge of $1 for failure to pay, but it will allow them to make a payment within 72 hours to avoid the additional surcharge of $20. Davey contacted the legislators on Friday in response to their letter to inform them that he would implement their 72-hour grace period suggestion.

"I feel this is a fair compromise that will make it easier for the MBTA to collect its parking fees and surcharges and allow commuters to make a payment to avoid the additional surcharge," Bradley said.

"While I understand the T's position with respect to creating a more efficient collection system, I am encouraged by a process that can find compromise between government and the public at a difficult economic time," said Hedlund.

There are a number of programs and technologies that the MBTA has instituted and will be instituting over the next few years that should make it easier and smoother for commuters to pay for parking and for their fares.

Inside look at 'brains of operation'

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Jacobs Meadow Outfall Project — As we promised in our article last week, we have saved the best for near the end. We've talked about the rebuild of the channel adjacent to the Legion building, the construction and purpose of the new gate chamber, the six by ten foot vertical sluice gate in the chamber wall, and the gate operator. These are all essential parts, but the item that makes all of these components work together is the control system.

If you look carefully behind the stonewalls at the Veteran's Memorial, you will see a new stainless steel cabinet. Inside of this cabinet lies the "brains" of our whole operation. The cabinet connects to the various devices via underground wiring. The first photo shows what the cabinet looks like on the inside. At the bottom you can see the conduits that house the necessary electrical connections. Rather than spiel techno babble 'till your eyes glaze over, we'll try to hit the high spots of what you see in the photo. The cabinet is divided down the middle into two distinct parts. The right hand side handles all of the power as it comes from the pole and makes it available to the control system and the gate operator. The power side also has provision for the Town to plug an emergency generator into the cabinet to provide external power, should it be needed.

The left hand side is where the "brains" reside. Essentially, it consists of what is known in the trade as a "PLC" which stands for programmable logic controller. The PLC is in the top portion of the cabinet, along with a video screen for data input and output. It is this device that gets information, such as the height of the water in the harbor and the height of the water in the gate chamber, calculates whether the tide is rising or falling and adjusts the sluice gate according to a preset scheme. Various operational set points can also be adjusted from this screen. The Town can switch the controller into one of three distinct modes of operation.

The first mode is the "normal" mode. This is the program that will operate the gate most of the time. The second mode is the "storm" mode. This mode is designed to be engaged when we know a storm such as a northeaster is expected. The concept for this control scheme is to let as much water out of Jacobs Meadow as the tides will permit. Thus, the meadow will be as "empty" as is could possibly be. This maximizes the volume of storm water that Jacobs Meadow can hold during times when the tides will not permit the storm water release.

The third mode is the "manual" mode. An operator can select at any time whether the gate will be 100%, 75%, 50%, 25%, or 0% open. One use for the manual mode is for the control to allow salt water to flow into the meadow to fully soak the roots of the very invasive phragmites. Over time, this will begin to weaken and destroy the phragmites that can be reached by salt water "flooding." Of course, this manual flooding operation will need carefully monitor the level of water in Jacobs Meadow to avoid property damage.

The control system has been programmed to perform some self-diagnosing functions and report abnormal conditions. This is accomplished by a device called an autodialer. The autodialer can receive notification from the PLC controller regarding a malfunction condition and will place a phone call to the Police Dispatch Center with notification of the emergency. The police will then call the DPW as they normally do for other emergency situations. The second photo shows Verizon making the phone connection at a nearby utility pole for this emergency phone line.

Lest you worry about total loss of power for extended periods of time and, for some reason, we have no emergency power generation capability, the gate has a manual hand wheel that will allow the DPW to raise or lower the gate at any time just by turning the hand crank. This is the ultimate fail-safe operation. As we write this article we are preparing for our trial operation period and the necessary training session to fully acquaint Town personnel with the complete operation of this new system.

HEALTH NOTES

Paved areas and your health

STEVE BOBO

After years of jarring, bumpy rides and lost hubcaps, we in Cohasset are finally beginning to see the results of the town's new paving program – and the results could affect our health. Researchers are only now starting to investigate the relationship between a communities' infrastructure and the health of its citizens.

The first known city to have its streets paved with tar was Baghdad in the 8th century AD. More than 1,000 years later, John Loudon McAdam invented a road construction method called macadamisation. These roads were adequate for use by horses and carriages or coaches, but they were very dusty and subject to erosion with heavy rain. Later on, they did not hold up to higher speed motor vehicle use. Methods to stabilize macadam roads with tar date back to at least 1834, when John Henry Cassell, operating from Cassell's Patent Lava Stone Works in Millwall, an area in London, patented "Pitch Macadam." This method involved spreading tar on the sub-grade, then placing a typical macadam layer and finally sealing the macadam with a mixture of tar and sand. Tar-grouted macadam was also in use well before 1900, and involved scarifying the surface of an existing macadam pavement, spreading tar and re-compacting. Although the use of tar in road construction was known in the 19th century, it was little used and was not introduced on a large scale until the motorcar arrived on the scene in the early 20th century.

Hooley's 1901 patent for Tarmac involved mechanically mixing tar and aggregate prior to lay-down, and then compacting the mixture with a steamroller. The tar was modified by adding small amounts of Portland cement, resin and pitch.

Later developments as petroleum production increased, the byproduct asphalt became available in greater quantities and largely supplanted tar due to its reduced temperature sensitivity. The macadam construction process also became quickly obsolete due to its high manual labor requirement; however, the somewhat similar tar and chip method, also known as bituminous surface treatment, remains popular.

Of course, all new methods come with a price. A study, led by researchers at the U.S. National Center for Atmospheric Research and published in the Journal of Geophysical Research – Atmospheres, found that the sprawl of strip malls and other paved areas can affect weather patterns, trapping pollutants and hurting air quality during the summer months. In conducting the nine-day study, which focused on the Houston area, the investigators used atmospheric measurements and computer simulations to analyze how paved surfaces affected breezes. They found that pavement, which heats up and keeps land warmer overnight, reduced nighttime winds. The reason for this, the study authors explained, is that when land temperatures rise, the contrast between land and sea temperatures is reduced and winds die down.

...the investigators used atmospheric measurements and computer simulations to analyze how paved surfaces affected breezes.

"The developed area of Houston, which was the subject of the study, has a major impact on local air pollution," study author Fei Chen, an NCAR scientist, said in a news release from the journal publisher. "If the city continues to expand, it's going to make the winds even weaker in the summertime, and that will make air pollution much worse." Study authors noted that the development of paved areas, which impede the clearing of smog and air pollution, could have implications for the air quality of growing coastal cities in the United States as well as other regions overseas.

Although the researchers pointed out that more study is needed to better understand the link between wind patterns and urban development, they suggested that the findings may inspire city planners to take new approaches to development. The study found that drought conditions could also worsen air pollution since dry soil heats up more quickly during the day than wet soil.

So, in Cohasset, forewarned is forearmed.

FOR THE RECORD

We work with dummies

GREGORY MATHIS

Before anyone we work with gets too offended, let me explain the headline.

The term "dummy" is used to describe the process we use to mark up pages to indicate what stories, photos, press releases, etc. will go on a given page. The page is also called a dummy.

It's one of the many words and phrases used in the newspaper business that might raise eyebrows in the general public. Journalism jargon is not unlike terminology and terms used in other businesses and industries.

In fact, town government has a language all its own. Have you ever been to a conservation commission, planning board or zoning board of appeals meeting? Some of the jargon is hard to decipher, although we try our best to break down what's being said in laymen's terms.

I'll admit our business has its quirky phrases and terminology as well, and may not make a lot of sense if you're not "in the business."

In an effort to give you a better understanding of some of the journalism jargon flying around the newsroom, here are some explanations of words and phrases that come up regularly.

Headline: This should be fairly obvious, but let's not assume. A headline is the series of words above the story you're reading. In this case, "We work with dummies" is the headline. Headline writing is a skill and an art, and if done right, does the story justice and engages the reader right away.

Subhead: A little easier to write, the subhead is further explanation of a story. It's generally a little more factual than the main headline and most often the headline we use on the website version of the story.

Cutline: Caption may be a more familiar term, but a cutline is the information under a photograph that explains what's going on in the picture and who is in the picture.

Quote: Any time you see this, ", it starts a quote. A quote is used to capture what is being said verbatim from the person being interviewed.

Pullquote: Many of our stories contain important quotes that are displayed in bigger type for emphasis.

Masthead: The box on the Opinion or Forum page that lists all the contact information for the newspaper and all the key people. Sometimes called a glory box, because we may be the only ones who care about all that.

Flag: The area on the front page with the title of the paper. Sometimes called a banner.

Photo spread: If you see a full page of photographs from a particular event, we call that a photo spread. There's a half-page version of this as well.

Mugshot: We use the term to identify the photos that run with regular columns in the newspaper, not photos of us from a police booking. Headshot is another term used.

Refer box: Not that kind of refer, refer as in "reference." You may see a refer box on the front page guiding you to stories or other content inside the paper.

Nut graph: a paragraph or two of information that has been reported in the past to give the current story some context.

Put a 30 on it: an old-school journalism phrase indicating the end of the story, or an editor asking the reporter to finish the story quickly because deadline is approaching and he needs to turn in the dummy. Which is exactly the case here, so I'm putting a 30 on it.

Gregory Mathis is editor-in-chief of GateHouse Media New England's South unit, with offices in Marshfield, Plymouth and Raynham.

Keating reflects on complexities of conflicts

By Mary Jane Hanron

The tragic news that an American life had been lost in combat reached Congressman Bill Keating during a flight into the war torn region of Afghanistan.

As more information became available, Keating said he was shocked and saddened that the fallen hero was 23-year-old Sgt. William Woitowicz, a Groton, Mass. resident.

With hostilities raging nearby, Keating participated in the fallen comrade ceremony for Woitowicz, which he described as a simple, pure and dignified service consisting of a salute, a prayer and accompanying the casket onto the airplane that would bring him home. "It was jarring and emotional and really brought to life what we are losing there; promising American lives."

In an area plagued by despair and lawlessness situated in a harsh and unforgiving land, Keating witnessed the dauntingly complex challenges posed by the current state of the Middle East.

The Congressman recently returned from a 10-day Congressional delegation visit to Kuwait, Iraq, Pakistan, Afghanistan and Germany earlier in June.

Accompanied by four Republican colleagues from Congress, the Democrat said his fact-finding trip to the war-ravaged land took concerns for the state of affairs there to a whole new level.

"It really raised more questions than it answered," he said. "But it was very helpful and allowed me to gain an understanding of what we face internationally. I have brought what I learned home with me and will use it when making decisions in the Congress as well as on committees."

Keating belongs to the Congressional Foreign Affairs and Homeland Security committees in the United States House of Representatives. Well aware of the fiscal restraints domestically, the Congressman said he believes the reason America remains involved in the conflict is because not doing so could allow terrorists intent on destroying the United States access to nuclear weapons.

"The Middle East conflict poses a real danger to our country. I know we have concerns here about spending, but our work there is significant. It is important to strike a balance between the two problems and come up with an answer to keep our economy on an upturn while protecting the nation from terrorism and destruction."

The visit was the Congressman's first to the region.

"I hear reports all the time because of my committee assignments about progress in the region as well as setbacks and ongoing concerns," he said. "But to see it in person, speak with people there on the ground, ask questions and see what is being done by our military is both helpful and daunting."

Details of the trip had been kept a secret until the American delegation had returned safely to Washington, D.C.

"At several stops, most notably during our meeting with government officials in Pakistan, there was always a gracious welcome but an underlying tension. This area is a global neighborhood that does not like America," said Keating.

Though the United States has been at war in the region since shortly after the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, Keating witnessed countries and cultures with major hurdles still to overcome as well as the tremendous difference made by American involvement during that time. He said he believes the experience was a testament to the bravery and superior training of the United States military.

Upon arriving in the Middle East, Keating's first stop was a military facility in Kuwait where he observed the organization as well as troop movement that is expected to lead to withdrawal of troops there.

"Their extensive preparation expedites the transfer of the military. If all goes well in the next month, it appears we are on schedule for the Dec. 1 withdrawal. The date is just about right," Keating said.

Next the delegation flew to Camp Victory in Iraq where they met and dined with the troops. Keating said great progress is being made in this area, however a recent up tick in violence was evident later that day when five U.S. troops were killed by a rocket aimed to destroy three United States SUV's. Keting said gunfire and explosions could be heard in the distance.

"What our people are doing there is extraordinary, but there is a long way to go," said Keating, citing various actions taken by the U.S. military to train Iraqi citizens to enforce the rule of law respectfully and consistently. "They interact with civilians; help them with things like starting a business, having a cart to sell things or making a product."

Keating said a visit to the market made him realize that Iraq was far ahead of Afghanistan in development.

"The difference I was told was that Iraqi's are far better educated and have an existing infrastructure allowing for more civilized interaction among neighbors and villages," he said.

Pakistan was the next stop for the delegation. Upon meeting with parliamentarian officials, Keating said that the tension in the air was obvious.

"They feel embarrassed about our country getting bin Laden without their knowledge," he said.

The arrest of spies by the Pakistani government occurred days following the delegation's trip to Washington.

"For me this has become a moral issue," said Keating. "If terrorists are being allowed to cross the border and conduct suicide bombings and random killings, this is very troubling. They clearly hope to silence dissention.

"Contacts between the countries should be based on cooperation. Instead, Americans have reasons for misgivings."

Regarding Afghanistan, Keating said, "It is clear that they are far less developed that Iraq," adding that most Iraqi's are educated to read and write while more than 80 percent of Afghani's are illiterate. "When trying to train the Afghan soldiers to take over, Americans are faced with a largely illiterate population of people. How can you impose just government and enforce the rule of law with officers who are can not read or write?"

The delegation observed a police-training program and toured a detention facility. They were also informed about counter terrorism strategies currently being implemented and studied by the United States.

Meetings with General David Petreus and General Lloyd J Austin III provided the American delegation with useful insight as well.

"I am sure as General Petreus arranges to leave his post he will prepare recommendations that will eventually be presented to President Obama," Keating said.

In Afghanistan, Keating said he was uplifted while visiting a school with young children and seeing it as a bright opening in a nation burdened with despair.

"It was nothing like what we think of as a school but it provided a significant glimmer of hope," he said. "It was a small shack with a bench inside."

Speaking to the children with the help of an interpreter, Keating said the children seemed happy and excited about learning. "They were reading stories and having a test in a couple weeks. They were working hard so they could do well," he said. "We gave the children pencils as gifts. They were as thrilled as if it had been a bar of gold. In their village they carry a pencil or wear it in their shirt as a badge of honor. It is a prestigious symbol that tells others they are learning."

An interpreter who assisted the delegation during their visit spoke to Keating about his hopes.

"He told me that it was important to help the Americans because he did it for his family. He wanted his children to have a better life and grow up in a society with more freedom. In order for children to have a chance they need to be educated to form and maintain their own government. Otherwise, this father said, there was a fear that the nation would revert to Taliban rule."

Before returning to the United States, Keating stopped in Germany at the United States Military Hospital at Landstuhl. There he toured the facilities, including the Intensive Care Unit where troops with grave injuries were being treated. Among the most advanced medical centers in the world, Landstuhl is a frequent stop for troops injured in combat to be stabilized before they return home to the United States.

Keating said he wanted the people of the 10th Congressional District to know that good things are happening in the region despite the continuing danger and violence. Counterterrorism efforts on behalf of the United States are impressive, he said. The nation is not only reacting to terrorist events that may occur but are instrumental in thwarting them.

"In order for true change to come to the region the people of these nations must help themselves. Until they are better prepared we must help them," he said. "It is in the best interests of our homeland.

"It is a privilege of my job to take such a trip and see firsthand the challenges we face in this nation. Given our fiscal constraints, I am aware of the concerns of spending but I will now also look at the problems in the Middle East from a different level and perspective. I see the importance of striking a balance that is fiscally responsible at home and continuing our work there for the safety of the United States and the world. It is emotional and daunting, but this experience will be helpful as I continue my work in Congress."

CALLING ALL VETERANS

Navy Lt. Roger Pompeo, center, arriving in Vietnam in September 1967 flanked by two of his Navy Corpsmen, Leslie Carter is on his right and Gerald Sweeney on the left.

Winning the hearts and minds

RONALD WHEATLEY

Nestled amidst the buildings that comprise the Village of Cohasset are the offices of Dr. Roger Pompeo. There's nothing to suggest that the owner's practice was not always as a family doctor right out of a Norman Rockwell portrait caring for his patients in town.

"Our hospital took care of all comers — civilians, military, Viet Cong," Pompeo said. "It didn't matter to us, if they needed to be stitched up. We didn't care. My experience was a lot different from yours and probably a lot of other people. It didn't matter what your politics were (if you were sick or injured), I was going to try to fix you up and help you. "

In his last year at Boston University Medical School, Pompeo was enrolled Navy's Senior Medical Student program. His commitment was to complete medical school and to go on active duty after internship.

In early 1967, Pompeo was assigned to a group of 12 Navy Corpsmen and three doctors and an administrative officer. They trained together and were sent to Vietnam in September of that year as part of the Military Provincial Hospital Assistance Program (MILPHAP – N7), which was designed to "win the hearts and minds of the people."

"My first friends in the group were Navy Corpsmen Leslie Carter and Gerald Sweeney," he said. "They were two enlisted men who were wonderful people."

Prior to deployment, the team trained in Washington, D.C., for about six weeks.

"We studied Vietnamese and learned a little bit about the culture," Pompeo said.

Arriving in Saigon, the team flew by helicopter to the Kien Giang Province hospital, located on the South China Sea coast near the city of Rach Gia in what was IV Corps, where Americans were not fighting the war, but acting as advisers to South Vietnamese forces. The team at the hospital had very little security.

"The war went on at night. Casualties would start to come in the next morning. And so we would triage; we had very little blood to give to anyone. We would operate first on the ones that could make it. We only had two operating rooms," Pompeo said.

In addition to serving the Vietnamese people in the hospital, Pompeo and his team made rounds.

"We would make Med Caps," he said. "We would take these small Vietnamese boats out to the villages. The people knew we were coming. We would go to a village and have sick call. We had no security. Along the banks you could see young men of military age. I think they were Vietcong. I always felt that they are not going to hurt us because we were the only surgical capacity in the entire province. I didn't worry so much about at getting killed — perhaps as I should have — I always felt that I would be captured and that they would put me to work doing surgery. I believe that our security was in knowing that we were there to help."

It was deadly, dangerous work. If you go to the Vietnam Memorial Wall you will find Carter's name on panel 54, line 27. Sweeney was wounded in the same attack and subsequently succumbed. A third member of the team, Richard Allen Nelson, stepped on a landmine and his name appears on the wall on panel 29E, line 97.

While Pompeo had done surgery as an intern and felt confident, the challenges in Vietnam were at a different level.

"I look back now and I ask, 'How did I do that?'" he said. "This one particular day there was a guy who was not going to make it so they assigned him to me — being the junior man. The guy was still alive so I took him in. He had a depressed fracture of the skull, so I took care of that. I closed a wound in his chest. I go down to his abdomen where I discovered a bullet had penetrated his liver and gallbladder. I had to suture the liver and remove the gallbladder. I had to do a colostomy and suture the small bowel. He was still alive. I was rolling him off the table and there was a wound in his back through his kidney, and I had to remove his kidney. I gave him two pints of blood. I said to myself, 'One patient and I did my whole surgical residency.'"

If winning the hearts and minds of the people was a challenge, winning the confidence of his Vietnamese physician colleagues was a greater one.

"All Americans down in IV Corps were there to be advisers to their Vietnamese counterparts," Pompeo said. "But the Vietnamese doctors were too proud to have anyone give them advice. So what they did was to split the hospital into a medical obstetrics section and a surgical section. We ran the surgical section. Only one time in the whole year did they ask me for advice. A little pygmy lady was on her fourth pregnancy. The first three ended in miscarriages because her pelvis was so small that she could not deliver normally. This was her fourth and she is going into labor. And they asked me to do a (Caesarean) section. They weren't trained for any surgery. So I did a C-section and delivered a little normal-sized baby boy, and you should have seen the smile on her face. She was so happy; it was one of the most rewarding things I have ever done."

Pompeo vividly remembers another special patient, a young girl who had been seriously burned by napalm.

"We operated on her several times. We had to keep her on intravenous feeding, but she was going downhill fast, and we were going to lose her in spite of the surgeries that were healing," he said. "Mercy Nichols and some ladies from the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset wanted to do something, wanted to make a contribution to the Vietnamese. So they talked to my wife, Ann, who suggested they send the money to Roger and he will do something. This little girl was the first recipient. I took my interpreter, Co Cuc, downtown and we brought dresses, a little doll, food and some toys. We went back to her bedside with all of these little gifts. People gathered around, including the nun who was nurse. I gave my little napalm girl the doll. But she didn't know what the doll was for. This little girl had bandages all over her head and her hands. So we wrapped bandages on the doll the exact same way. She just lay there. She didn't know the concept of giving and receiving. And nothing happened. But the next day when we checked on her, she was outside playing with the other children."

Pompeo grew up in North Weymouth, and moved to Cohasset for high school, where he played on the football team as an outside running back.

"I married the quarterback's sister," Ann Chatterton of Cohasset, he said.

A Cohasset High School graduate, Class of 1958, Pompeo attended Bowdoin College. He has returned to his hospital in Vietnam for visits on two occasions, the second time with his wife about five years ago.

The Pompeos sponsored his interpreter, Co Cuc, who fled Vietnam after the war with the "boat people." They brought her to Cohasset, where she lived with them for a year. That is when she met her husband-to-be Nguyen and moved to Jamaica Plain. Co Cuc named her daughter Ann, after Ann Pompeo. The Pompeos have four daughters and 13 grandchildren.

There is a patient exam room in Pompeo's office where one might notice a small, framed citation reading "Bronze Star for Meritorious Achievement in ground operations against hostile forces, November 1968."

Bringing his energies to Cohasset

Menino declares 'Jack Creighton Day' in Boston

By Sara Hollingshead
shollingshead@wickedlocal.com

Jack Creighton, a member of the Conservation Commission and President Emeritus of the Audubon Circle Neighborhood Association (ACNA) has a neighborhood philosophy — power should flow back to the neighborhood and citizens whenever possible. Jack believes, "The people who live in and are affected by neighborhood policies are best to make decisions."

Creighton served as President of the ACNA for 11 years and was a board member for 23 years; in those years, Creighton made a positive impact on the neighborhood and city of Boston. During his time as President, Creighton made sure that the citizens of Audubon Circle were always represented. He worked to bring all factions together to represent all interests of Audubon residents. In addition, Creighton was able to make Audubon Circle its own zoning district.

Now, as a member of Conservation Commission, Creighton is bringing his energies to Cohasset. As a Cohasset resident for a number of years, Creighton has become a part of and understands the neighborhood. As a part of the Conservation Commission, Creighton hopes to be a part of a process, which balances the needs of government and citizens.

During his time as President of ACNA, Creighton influenced the City of Boston in numerous ways, most notably in forging relationships between City and State, department heads, elected officials, business owners, developers and local institutions. Creighton hopes his experience in ACNA will help him with his work on the Conservation Commission.

Creighton reflects, "that through a lot of hard work, the ACNA was able to change what was an oblique area into a vibrant part of the neighborhood."

Vice President of ACNA, Richard Ong comments, "Jack showed unwavering dedication and commitment to community causes always exercising tremendous insight and judgment."

Creighton's hard work in Audubon Circle was recognized earlier this month; Boston Mayor Thomas Menino thanked Creighton by way of declaring June 15 as Jack Creighton Day in Boston and ACNA recognized him as President Emeritus. Ong reflected, "Though Jack's position will be filled he will never be replaced." Furthermore, Ong has "no doubt that Jack will serve the Cohasset community with this same dedication and commitment."

Creighton knows that "if one has the opportunity to serve, one should be glad and grateful that people have trusted and empowered you."

As a part of the Conservation Commission, Creighton is "privileged to work with good people and make a change. I am very content to have a positive influence and impact the citizens of Cohasset."

AMERICAN LEGION BASEBALL

Heavy duty baseball

Post 118 plays marathon schedule

By William Wassersug
wwassersug@wickedlocal.com

They might be exhausted, but they're having fun.

That's the nature of the American Legion baseball season and it's no different for members of Cohasset Post 118, a team made up of players from Cohasset and Scituate.

For the second straight season, weather and success have worked against Post 118, but there's something different with the way things have worked in the early going this year as the team worked toward the midway point of the season with a 7-4 record as of Wednesday night.

That included a 9-2 win over Stoughton on Sunday afternoon that was part of a stretch of seven games in seven days.

Post 118 then had Monday off before beating Holbrook 18-3 on Tuesday at Holbrook to begin a stretch of five straight games.

They lost 15-6 to Milton on Wednesday night and had Quincy Post 294 on Thursday (results were unavailable at press time).

Both wins featured Scituate pitchers, with Casey Burns getting the win against Stoughton and Henry Lockwood doing the honors against Holbrook.

The past two seasons have been frustrating ones for Post 118.

Two seasons back, there just wasn't enough time to get all the games in and Cohasset missed out by two points.

Last year, the team came up a point short after a slow start and lack of help from Weymouth, who claimed the final playoff spot with a late surge.

The slow start was partially due to Cohasset High School players winning a Div. 4 State Championship that kept

Award winning performance

It was a great season of outstanding achievement for the Cohasset Girls U13 (5th and 6th grade) Lacrosse Team. The U13 Blue and White teams won against every town in the South Shore League and swept the Jamboree, the girls were rewarded with a celebratory dinner at Atlantica, overlooking Cohasset Harbor. The coaching staff acknowledged the girls' remarkable team play and dedication to each other and their sport, telling them how proud of them they are and offering congratulations. GOLF NOTES

Before summer's over, here is a 'to do' list

PAUL HARBER

Next Monday is the Fourth of July, which is a grand day, but the old golfer in me knows it is the harbinger of the end of the season.

What you say? Summer has just begun.

Yup, but once you hit the Fourth, Labor Day is around the corner and we'll will be back to yellow buses and high school football before you can yell, "Fore!"

It's 61 days until Labor Day, but summer goes by too quickly.

So, here is a summer bucket list: things to do before Back to School sales are history.

- See if you can play the front nine at River Bend GC in West Bridgewater without putting the ball in the drink. It's a fun course but all sorts of water hazards on the front nine. Here's a game for there. Furthest away from the pin on the par-3 eighth hole has to buy a round for the foursome.

- See if you can par Nos. 3, 4 and 5 at Pembroke CC. The game: Everyone put a buck (or $5) and whoever has the low score on those holes takes the pot.

- Get through the back nine at South Shore CC in Hingham without three-putting. The back nine has, as a group, the trickiest greens in the region. And you conclude the quest on No. 18, where if you have a downhill putt, you're lucky if you don't four-putt. It's the most devious green in the region.

- Take a lesson from a PGA pro. It's cheaper than trying to buy a game with the purchase of a new driver. Russell Quigg at Waverly Oaks in Plymouth is a terrific instructor. So is Joe Keefe at South Shore or Peter Norton at Thorny Lea in Brockton. The most decorated for teaching is Tom Cavicchi at the Harmon Club of Rockland. Tour pros have sought his help. Do yourself a favor and improve your game.

- Take a kid, be it a son, grandson, nephew, neighbor, to the par-3 course in West Bridgewater at the crossroads of route 128 and 27. The holes are only 100 feet long, they give you a 9-iron and a colored ball and even a 7-year-old can make a par. It's a great place to introduce a girl friend to the game, too.

- If you're on Cape Cod, make an excuse to go to Truro and play Highland Links, a quaint nine-hole that takes you back to the way courses looked when the game was introduced in America.

Oh, we could go on and on, but there is only so much space . . .

Tourney talk

Tom Cavicchi shows he can play as well as teach. The Harmon Club pro and amateur partner Joe Fitzsimmons finished seventh with a 7-under 65 in the New England Pro-Am Championship Four-Ball Tournament at Nashawtuc CC in Concord last week. Norwell natives Brian and David Spitz teamed up and finished ninth at 5-under . . . Jack Weeks of Milton is playing the waiting game. He was named the first alternate at the U.S. Senior Open qualifying tournament at the Bay Club at Mattapoisett last Tuesday. Kirk Hanefeld of the International was medalist with a 3-under 68 and is heading to the Senior Open July 28-31 at Inverness in Toledo, Ohio. Weeks, an amateur and member at Wollaston in Milton and the Boston Club in Hingham, fashioned a 1-under 70 . . . Several local golfers qualified for the State Amateur Public Links Championship in a tournament at Bay Pointe CC last week. John Nolan of Easton shared medalist honors with a 2-under 70. Nick Clarke (see Golfer of the Week) had a 71 to earn a berth. Jim Forsgard of South Shore was sixth with a 73. Dan Santos of Bay Pointe finished ninth with a 74. David Laplante of Pine Oaks of Easton, Bruce Wedge of Bay Pointe and Kevin Foley of Ponkapoag tied for 13th with 75s. Rick Aherne of South Shore, Brian O'Leary of Ponkapoag, Scott King of Norton and Mike Moniz of Poquoy Brook tied for the 16th and final qualifying berths by shooting 76s. The State Public Links will be held Aug. 2-3 at South Shore CC . . . Rory McIlroy was in the region, 24 hours after winning the US Open at Congressional, playing a few holes of golf at Willowbend in Mashpee. He flew to the Cape to honor his commitment to a private outing sponsored by Fireman Capital Partners. McIlroy played golf, signed autographs, and posed for pictures all afternoon. He left the clubhouse around 4:30 p.m. after the guests presented McIlroy with a cake and a rendition of "Happy Major to You" to the tune of "Happy Birthday." Other golfers present at the private outing were Vijay Singh, Ian Poulter, Anthony Kim, Rocco Mediate, and Cristie Kerr. Mediate was particularly impressed by McIlroy's record-breaking performance.

GOLFER OF THE WEEK

Nick Clarke, Bay Pointe Country Club

Nick Clarke, a member at Bay Pointe CC in Wareham, used his home-course knowledge last week to secure a qualifying spot in the Massachusetts State Public Links championship.

The three-time club champion equaled Kevin Carey's score of 1-over par 71 by carding six birdies and seven bogies. A Plymouth native, Clarke transferred to Bentley University this past season and was the NE-10 Rookie of the Year.

In fact, five times during the 2010-11 season, Clarke, a junior at Bentley, was named the Northeast-10 Conference Golf Rookie of the Week.

He concluded the collegiate season by winning the Mike Bello Invitational, hosted by Le Moyne College at the En-Joie Golf Club in Endicott, N.Y. After opening with a 77, Clarke posted a second-round 74 for a 36-hole total of 151. Only two golfers had a better second round score.

Clarke led the Falcons with a 76.3 stroke average, the second best recorded by a Bentley player in the last decade. Thirteen of his 15 rounds have been in the 70s.

All of this after two years away from competitive golf. It put no rust on his skills.

Clarke had put away his clubs during his freshman and sophomore years while focusing on academics at the University of Connecticut. The school wasn't quite the right fit for the 21-year-old, so Clarke transferred to Bentley last fall.

"Bentley is a better fit for me," Clarke told GateHouse reporter David Wolcott last spring. The managerial economics major said, "it's a great business school."

With the change of school, Clarke decided to pick up the clubs once again.

Nick Clarke

And with the addition of Clarke, Bentley became a better golf team.

"I hoped I would be able to step in and help out the team right away, but to win the Rookie of the Year is something special," Clarke said. "I didn't know what to expect after taking a couple of years off from competitive golf, but the guys were great and I was able to fit in right away."

After deciding to take his talents to Bentley, Clarke got an extra surprise when Mickey Herron, long-time director of golf at Bay Pointe, was named head coach at Bentley.

"The way things turned out was great," Clarke said. "Mickey has been a great coach for me."

The 18th hole at Little Harbor is a picturesque finishing hole with trees lining both sides of the fairway. An intimidating lateral hazard marsh area is located along the left side. Wind is always a factor on the 18th and can be gauged by the beautiful American flag that flies beyond the green. Unfortunately, the wind is rarely at your back so a PAR here is a great score.

SAILING

Keep the Wind in our Sails fundraiser

Trivia Night at the Hull Yacht Club is July 23

The high school sailing team, a seemingly impossible dream of local parents and students just a year ago, had a phenomenal second season! It's time to start raising funds for season three.

A collaborative team consisting of students from Cohasset HS, Hull HS, and the South Shore Charter School, named the Nantasket Nor'easters, compete in the Massachusetts Bay League and is coached by a team of coaches led by former collegiate coach, Kevin Broome.

Thanks to the support and generosity of Sail Nantasket and the Hull Yacht Club, the team operates out of the yacht club sailing in the eight Club 420's which Sail Nantasket has purchased over the last several years.

With school athletic budgets facing both significant cuts and increasing costs, there would be no possible way for a team to have formed without the volunteers and donors who have invested years of effort toward launching this endeavor. Sail Nantasket is relying on the continued generosity of the community to volunteer their time and talents in running the program and for donations.

Visit http://www.sailnantasket.org/noreasters to watch videos of the team in action and to learn more about Trivia Night.

To purchase the $25 tickets or to donate an auction item, please contact Joanne Pearson at jmocp@comcast.net or Lisa Campbell at lcampbell@hotmail.com

YOUTH SOCCER

Boys Under 12 No. 1 second at State Championships

After starting the season 1-2, the Cohasset Boys Under 12 No.1 Soccer team ran the table and won the Coastal League Division 2 Championship.

With that title in hand, Cohasset headed to Lancaster and the Mass. Tournament of Champions, where they battles to a second-place finish.

Undaunted by the slow 1-2 start, the Cohasset boys came together as a team and went on a 6-0-1 tear to qualify for the Coastal League playoffs. This included defeating a tough Scituate team in the second to last week of the season, creating a showdown with Marshfield in the final regular season match.

Marshfield had defeated Cohasset 1-0 earlier in the season during a monsoon and the boys stood ready, seeking to redress their previous loss. In front of a capacity crowd at the Cohasset Sports Complex, the boys disposed of their eager competitors and earned a spot in the playoffs.

With spirits high going into the playoffs, and despite being short-handed due to injuries and scheduling conflicts, the Cohasset Boys took it to their opponents.

Three hard fought games later, a shot at the title was in front of them.

The final Divisional game was a thriller for the record books.

After playing full regulation and a 10 minute extra period the score was knotted 2-2, forcing a shootout.

Stellar play on both sides of the ball gave the fans far more than they could ask for. Each team selected the first five players to compete in the shoot-out. Goalies nervously prepared themselves for the challenge.

Round one - Cohasset went first. Mitchell Buckley chose his spot and netted a low ball to get the Cohasset boys off to a strong start. Carver answered with a goal.

Round two - George Bryan buried his attempt in the corner and Cohasset fans paid tribute. Carver followed with a goal of their own.

Round three -Kyle McFetridge continued the trend and buried his shot. As tension grew louder, Carver's third attempt found the air above the crossbar and sailed wide.

Round four - Cam Pattison rocketed a shot seeking the high corner that was denied by the gifted Carver keeper.

As the shots wound down with Cohasset leading 3-2 with two attempts left for Carver and one for Cohasset, time stood still. Carver's forth striker approached the ball. With a low and hard blast to the corner. The shot looked well struck and headed for destiny, but it was instead denied by Liam O'Connell with a committed dive that interrupted the path of the shot, closing Cohasset within one successful attempt from victory.

Round five - Cole Joslin approached the ball, pointing at his keeper to show respect for the awesome save, picked his spot and fired a winner into the net.

With the title in hand, the boys of Cohasset had completed their improbable journey by capturing the championship and a berth in the state playoffs, otherwise known as the Massachusetts Tournament of Champions (MTOC).

Still facing injuries and scheduling conflicts for both players and coaches, the Cohasset soccer community pulled together and coaches Dave Frederick and Andrew Legge stepped up along with a couple of new recruits to fill out the roster for the state playoffs.

The boys faced Berkshire Hills Juventus in the opener, where the combined offensive and midfield play by Jack Nee, Kyle McFetridge, Cameron Pattison, Cole Joslin, Nathaniel Purdy, Jay them off the field for several games, leaving Scituate players to battle on their own.

When the Skipper players returned, Post 118 won nine of 10 games down the stretch.

Cohasset won the title again this year, but those players only missed two games and while Post 118 lost both games, the Scituate contingent played well in a pair of one-run losses.

"We could have started late with the Cohasset kids out," Post 118 founder/general manager/coach Scott Arnold said, echoing a decision made last season. "The Scituate kids were ready and wanted to play. After they lost the playoff game to Norwell we waited a week. The boys were pumped for Legion. We felt it was the right thing to do. They did a great job. The kids battled."

This week could be interesting as a number of players will be doing ASP projects and will be unavailable.

Still, Arnold said this is the year he expect things to come together.

"We're hoping to keep the team together most of the season and not have to fight for the last playoff spot," he said. "This is my 21st season and this team has the most talent I've seen. This is a team where when we're missing starters the backups step up and win. We're eager. We want it this year."

This squad is very deep when everyone is there. That includes pitching

Scituate just finished a very successful regular season and Cohasset won the Div. 4 State Title.

Lockwood and Burns are both outstanding pitchers, and Chase Michaud is 2-0 this season with a two-hitter under his belt.

Cohasset hurlers include Jeff Cavanaro, Jamie Faber and Connor Goetz, who surprised Arnold with a win over Braintree.

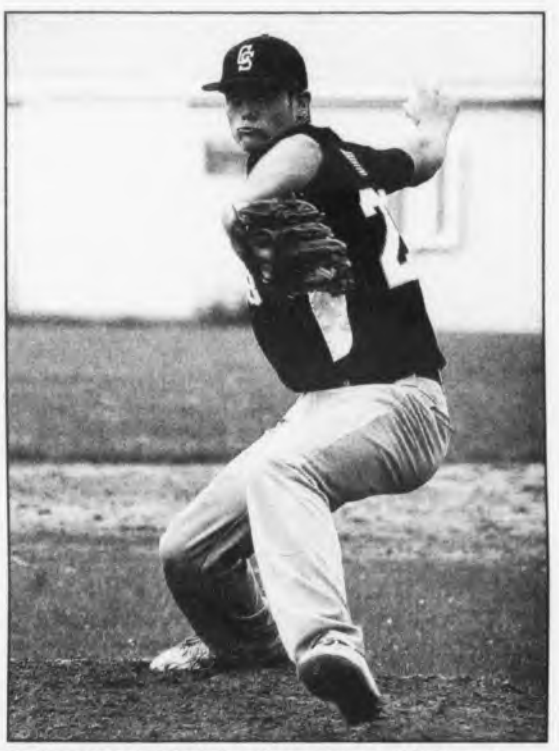
"Connor is our backup catcher and a starting pitcher," Arnold said. "He beat Braintree Friday night. I didn't know he could pitch. We had to rewrite the lineup."

The team captains are Matt Sheehan and Cavanaro.

"Those are my four-year veterans," Arnold said. "They're good kids. Good athletes."

Arnold loves the way his players approach the game.

"The kids couldn't wait to play," he said. "They're baseball players. It's what they do. The teams go together really well. The two towns play well together. Even when they play each other it's something special."



Arnold admitted that with all the games, coupled with Cohasset's playoff run, that his team was physically tired, but that's not a problem.

"We're tired," Arnold said. "But we're having a blast. We're 6-3 (7-3 after Tuesday's win) and play nine more. We're halfway there. We're tied for third place in Zone 6. Things are going well."

Arnold credited his fellow coaches, including manager Greg Taylor, who played for Arnold for five years and has been coaching Post 118 for four, fifth-year pitching coach Bobby Barrow and new bench coach Jim Sweeney.

"Greg is still the manager," Arnold said. "We've worked together a long time. We have a good time."

Cohasset hosts Braintree tonight at 5:45 and is at Weymouth's Stella Field at 5:45 Saturday night.

COLLEGE LACROSSE

Cohasset's Brown named Scholar All-America

The Unites States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association has named University of Denver men's lacrosse senior Jeff Brown, of Cohasset, a Scholar All-America.

Brown is the seventh Pioneer since the men's lacrosse program became Division I to earn the honor.

"Jeff Brown quietly put together two fabulous years on the field for us, as he consistently handled the challenge of facing our opponents' top attackman," said head coach Bill Tierney. "Being named ECAC First Team defender and now, Scholar All-America, brings to light what a fantastic student-athlete Jeff truly is. He was an instrumental leader in our rise to the elite level of Division I Lacrosse."

A starter in 17 of 18 games for the Pioneers this season, Brown was not only a leader on the field but in the classroom as well. Graduating with a degree in finance, Brown took part in June's commencement ceremonies with a cumulative GPA over a 3.0.

On the field, Brown tallied with 24 ground balls and finished second on the team with 19 caused turnovers. He was honored as an All-ECAC First Team selection.

Brown helped Denver advance to the Final Four for the first time in school history. Denver lost to eventual National Champion, Virginia.

Frederick, Michael Legge, and Connor Joslin resulted in a convincing 6-0 victory.

Cohasset lost their second game 8-1 to the division-winning Acton-Boxborough team that had already outscored two other opponents 14-0.

Cohasset quickly rallied, and with some terrific defensive play by Gavin Dunkelberger, George Bryan, Liam O'Connell, Aiden McHugh and goaltender Andrew Sullivan, they managed to protect a 1-0 lead and defeat a tough North Andover team in their third and final preliminary game.

While Cohasset didn't win their MTOC division, based on goal differentials, they earned the one wild card slot in the semifinals.

More importantly, Cohasset was also awarded the Citizens Bank MTOC Good Citizenship Sportsman's Award that is given to one team of each gender in the Tournament that displays the highest degree of sportsmanship. Members of each team selected for the Award all receive a $100 Savings Bond.

In the semifinals, the boys beat back a previously undefeated Tyngsborough team 4-2 for a second shot at Acton-Boxborough in the finals.

With the addition of defender, Mitchell Buckley, the boys stepped up their play and held Acton-Boxborough close, trailing just 2-1for almost the entire game, before allowing two late goals at the very end of a 4-1 loss.

Even with the final result, it was an outstanding team effort and a second-place finish by the boys in the first MTOC appearance by a Cohasset team in over four years.

Meet the team

The defensive front: George Bryan, Gavin Dunkelberger, Liam O'Connell and Aidan McHugh shut down opponents throughout the playoffs. Aidan's controlled defense kept many dangerous players to the outside of the field. George was a powerhouse in the middle, shutting down anyone who attempted to penetrate the middle of the field. His bursts of speed added a strong offensive counter threat and created instant offense. Gavin shut down the other half of the field stepping up nicely to win many 50/50 balls.

Mitchell Buckley added depth to the defensive posture and skill to the midfield attack. Mitchell played many roles over the course of the season and he did so willingly and with great focus. Great ball control, speed and instinct.

The midfield: What control and poise. Cole Joslin, Kyle McFetridge, Jack Nee and Nathaniel Purdy served a strong core with help from Andrew Sullivan, Will Englander, Ryan Golz and Cam Pattison when needed.

Cole was dominant with his control, anticipation and effort.

As the season progressed he really started to see the field well and made some very nice passes. Kyle split time with Cole in the middle of the field and added the same level of intensity and control. Strong foot skills allowed him to beat defensive positions and created many scoring opportunities – most were converted. Nutty and Jack played the outside midfield for most of the season and did so with great intensity. Andrew, Will E and Cam spent time in the midfield as well and did an excellent job controlling the pace of play.

Strikers: Will E has a knack of finding the open man in tight positions, especially inside the 18. His persistence and field vision paid off with goals and assists throughout the season. Sully also played strong in the forward position. His foot skills and confidence built throughout the season and resulted in many excellent offensive opportunities. Special thanks to Sully for pulling on the goalie jersey and doing an excellent job in net. This leaves Cam. What a shot. Some of the most beautiful goals on crosses from anyone all season.

Keepers: Strong start to the season with Will Castro. Fast, dependable and smart. Will provided the stability and confidence we needed. Unfortunately we lost him to back-to-back injuries and were without his services for the second half of the season, so we had to go to "plan B", or plan "R" It was tough to be the coach's son because you never know what dad will ask you to do, like play goalie. Pressed into duty, Ryan jumped in to the fray and did an excellent job in net. His "drop and go" runs up the field added some excitement to the game. A strong athlete, smart player with a great smile, the kid provided the confidence needed to play aggressive ball.

Cohasset Café closes for season

LIZA CARENS SALERNO

A group of early risers celebrated the last Cohasset Café of the spring season at the Lightkeepers Monday morning, while enjoying coffee, fresh fruit and yogurt, homemade baked goods and quiche. Sponsored by the Friends of Cohasset Elders, this weekly gathering delivers an informal opportunity for seniors to engage and connect outside of the Senior Center.

Each Monday, volunteers coordinated by the Friends provide flavorful offerings such as quick breads, coffee cakes and egg dishes, while others set tables with fresh flowers, welcome guests and clean up. The café, which has been held April through June and September through November since 2009, has been so well-received that one group of seniors continued to meet each week, even after the Café closed last fall.

"We think of this as a magical thing," said Bettie Maree, a regular café attendee, volunteer greeter and a member of the group that met through the winter. "We were seven people going our separate ways and now we meet every Monday even when Café isn't in session. It has been wonderful for all of us and it is all because of Café."

Liza Carens Salerno is a freelance writer and a volunteer for Cohasset Elder Affairs. At the request of Mary Hooper, whose trust is the primary benefactor to Cohasset's proposed Senior Center, the new building will be called "Willcutt Commons," after her father, Levi Lincoln Willcutt.

Rita Burke and Judy Perry exchange a greeting.

Everyone's favorite pic-a-nic basket-stealing bear comes to the big screen. Jellystone Park has been losing business, so greedy Mayor Brown decides to shut it down and sell the land. That means families will no longer be able to experience the natural beauty of the outdoors and, even worse, Yogi and Boo Boo will be tossed out of the only home they've ever known. Faced with his biggest challenge ever, Yogi must prove that he really is 'smarter than the average bear' as he and Boo Boo join forces with their old nemesis Ranger Smith to find a way to save Jellystone Park from closing forever.

This week Hull Seaside Animal Rescue would like to find shelter for Heidi, their new little gray-and-white feline. She's just over a year and a half. She's as sweet as can be but a bit overwhelmed with her roommates and tends to hide, although in plain sight. She's a well-adjusted lass and is so looking forward to a "forever home."

She promises to use the scratching post, and to cuddle up with you and keep you company. She's one of our many adoptable felines. Please stop by and check out at least a dozen kittens and more than a dozen adult felines. HSAR has a great selection, all ages, sizes, colors and personalities. They have all been either spayed or neutered and are up to date on their shots.

You can check them out on the website along with many of HSAR's other cats.at www.hsar.org. HSAR has open hours on Saturday from 2-3 p.m. and Monday from 6:30-7:30 p.m. If these hours aren't convenient, please call the shelter at 781-925-3121 and leave a message for Judy, the Adoption Coordinator.

The shelter is located at 50 L St., Hull; the mailing address is Hull Seaside Animal Rescue, PO box 787, Hull, MA. 02045, email: hsar@verizon.net.

HSAR is always looking for volunteers. If you have a couple of hours a week to spare, please call Nancy at 782-925-3638. You'll be glad you did.

Thanks to the many people who generously donate to the HSAR cause. They couldn't do it without you.

Horoscope

SALOME'S STARS FOR RELEASE WEEK OF JULY 10, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You dislike waiting for promises to be fulfilled and for commitments to be kept, but resist your headstrong tendency to push things along. Your patience will be rewarded.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Expect continuing opposition to your plans from die-hard detractors. However, your determination to see things through will carry the day. A Pisces has romantic ideas.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) You might be too close to a troublesome workplace situation to deal with it successfully. Step away in order to get a better perspective. A solution soon becomes obvious.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) You might suspect that someone you trust has misled you on an important matter, but a more balanced view of things reveals a misunderstanding to be the culprit.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) The Big Cat's animal magnetism has rarely been stronger. You can either just bask in all that admiration or use it to your advantage, especially in the workplace.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Someone who previously balked at cooperating with you on a project suddenly has a change of heart. Accept both help and advice with grace.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Some hazy issues still need to be cleared up before you can move on with your new plans. A friend from the past reaches out to re-establish old ties.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Continued positive fall-out follows that risky workplace decision you made some time ago. Your payoff will soon prove to be more substantial than you expected.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) A personal relationship continues to be affected by a recent unexpected turn of events. Things need to work themselves out without finger-pointing.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) It's a wonderful week for all you capricious Goats to kick up your heels with friends or family members in some well-earned fun and frivolity.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Caution is advised before making a financial commitment to someone you don't really know. There are better ways to build friendships than with risky fiscal dealings.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Travel plans continue to be favored. A change of scenery brings new opportunities, both personally and professionally. Be open to the possibilities.

BORN THIS WEEK: You have a strong sense of loyalty that shows itself best in your relationships with family and friends.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

COHASSET CARILLON

'One of the finest sounding instruments in the world'

By Mary Kennedy
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Carillon (speaking in superlatives) can proudly claim the oldest continuing annual recital series in North America. The largest carillon by number of bells (57) in New England, it is considered one of the finest sounding instruments in the world. The smallest bell weighs about 19 pounds, the largest five and a half tons — more than 11,000 pounds! It was the second carillon to arrive in the United States (the first arrived in Gloucester in 1923).

Given as a gift to St. Stephen's Church by Mrs. Hugh (Jane) Bancroft) in memory of her mother, Jessie M. Barron, the first set of 23 bells was installed in the Gothic tower of the church in 1924. The event was significant enough for the New York Times to run a full-page photo of the church tower and carillon. A year later, President Calvin Coolidge and his wife Grace, at the invitation of financier Clarence Barron, stood on Cohasset Common for the afternoon recital played by world-renowned Belgian Carillonneur Kamiel Lefevere. In the interests of historical accuracy, however, it must be reported that after listening to "Annie Laurie" the president announced to Barron, "I should certainly like to see your cows." The group left for Barron's estate, The Oaks, for an inspection of cows, including a prize bull worth some $25,000.

During the 1930s, crowds of thousands – literally – thronged Cohasset Common on Sunday afternoons. Extra trains were scheduled to bring vacationers from Boston and Maine. Traffic was not allowed in the center of town during the recitals. Today, our carillon represents a unique heritage and continues to be a special treasure for all Cohasset residents.

Among the guest recitalists this summer season are carillonneurs from the United States, Canada, the Netherlands, Poland, and Ireland. You're all invited to bring lawn chairs or a blanket along with a picnic supper to enjoy on the Common while listening to the music of the bells. After each recital, a brief tour of the tower will be offered for those interested in seeing the instrument in the playing cabinet and the bells in the tower above.

If you would like to commemorate a special romantic or family event with the music of the bells, please email me: marymisha@aol.com

Mary Kennedy is Carillonneur, St. Stephen's Church.

Carillon recitals start Sunday

The Cohasset Carillon is the largest carillon by number of bells (57) in New England and can also claim the oldest continuing annual recital series in North America. In 1925, one year after the installation of the first set of bells (23), President Calvin Coolidge and his wife Grace stood on Cohasset Common, listening to Kamiel Lefevere play a program of popular songs, including "Annie Laurie."

The 87th annual Summer Recital Series begins Sunday July 3 at 6 p.m. and will continue each Sunday until August 14.

- July 3: Adrian Gebruers (Ireland)
- July 10: Gijsbert Kok (the Netherlands)
- July 17: Monika Kazmierczak (Poland)
- July 24: Mary Kennedy (Cohasset)
- July 31: Gordon Slater (Canada)
- Aug 7: Lee Cobb (Lake Wales, Fla.)
- Aug 14: Jonathan Lehrer (Cambridge, Mass.)

Cohasset Common, in the center of town, is one of the best listening places. Parking is ample and free. Bring your lawn chairs or a blanket along with a picnic supper to enjoy on the Common while the bells are ringing. After each recital, a brief tour of the tower is offered for those interested in seeing the instrument in the playing cabinet and the bells in the tower above.

CAMP, SCHOOL AND ACTIVITIES DIRECTORY

PROTECTING CAMPERS FROM THE ELEMENTS

By Bette Bussel – Executive Director American Camp Association, New England

A summer at camp gives children a great opportunity to enjoy everything the great outdoors has to offer, but it's important that they are mindful of staying healthy and safe. Before and during camp, parents should discuss ways for campers to protect themselves from the sun, bug bites, and other issues that can cause discomfort or more significant health issues.

1. Provide your child with clothing/accessories that can protect him/her from the sun's strong rays:

- Wear a hat to help protect the top of the head, face and/or neck
- Sunglasses with a UV-protected rating can protect the eyes
- Campers should put sunscreen on all exposed parts of his/her body
- Remember that just because it's cloudy doesn't mean campers can't be affected by the sun.

2. Wearing bug spray can reduce the risk of a camper being bitten by mosquitoes

For more tips and information on health and safety, families can visit www.CampParents.org, ACA's family resource site.

Jarrod Shoemaker, who placed 1st in the Pro/Elite field last Sunday, said it best after the race, "Cohasset is an incredible event. The preparation, the setting, the community help, and all the volunteers make this race the standard every other race is shooting for."

Our quick success on the national circuit would not be possible if it weren't for the tremendous work of my Race Coordinators who share the same passion as I do to deliver a great race for the athletes and spectators...

Programs for kids from pre-school to middle school

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

"We want the kids to have an unforgettable summer."
Ted Carroll, Recreation Director

For the first time this year, the Cohasset Recreation summer playground program was sold out by June 1.

While the program has almost always been filled to capacity, Recreation Director Ted Carroll made some changes to the registration process this year to ensure parents got signed up early.

Knowing the numbers, he said, has helped the department to design a program to appeal across all the age groups participating. The program started on Tuesday, June 28 and continues for seven weeks.

"Our goal of the program is that each child does not want to miss a day. Each morning, even when it's hot and humid, they want to get up and go," Carroll said. "We're striving for that goal by making subtle changes and hiring a fun and energetic staff."

Two hundred kids, ages 6 through 12, attend the playground program, which has been in existence for more than three decades. A preschool program for three to five year olds and a Summer Xtreme program just for middle school-aged kids complement the playground program. All seven weeks of the Summer Xtreme program, now in its third summer, sold out in April and currently has 30 kids on the waitlist.

"With everyone registered before June 1 we were really able to plan a program that suits everybody," Carroll said. Tweaks to the structure of the program, such as a dedicated swimming lesson time, have made the program more efficient. The playground and preschool programs are based out of the Deer Hill School and the Summer Xtreme program (when not on a field trip) is out of the Middle-High School.

"We want the kids to have an unforgettable summer," Carroll said. More structured activities – shows, arts and crafts, special days, and fieldtrips – are a part of the program this year.

"We've tried to create more of a 'camp' spirit," Carroll said. All the counselors have been assigned a "color" this year. They and their charges wear the same color shirts to instill camaraderie and team spirit.

Carroll said what is especially unique about the program is the ability for kids to "grow up" with it.

"We start these children at age three and a half, they go

Bear Hill water tank

Antenna companies could be changing

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

The plan for an AT&T cell antenna to be placed on the Bear Hill water tank, along with a controversial access road off Reservoir Road, was set into motion in the late winter.

Now, months later, there is still neither an access road nor a cell antenna – and the project, though still on the table, may be changing hands.

Peter DeCaprio, chairman of the Water Commission, said AT&T has taken a step back from the project due to their acquisition of another cell company giant, T-Mobile.

"They have told us that in light of the T-Mobile acquisition they are evaluating all their assets and evaluating virtually every site they have," DeCaprio said. T-Mobile recently installed a cell antenna in the steeple First Parish Church on Cohasset Common.

But, while AT&T figures out its next move in regard to cell reception in Cohasset, the Water Commission is negotiating with Verizon.

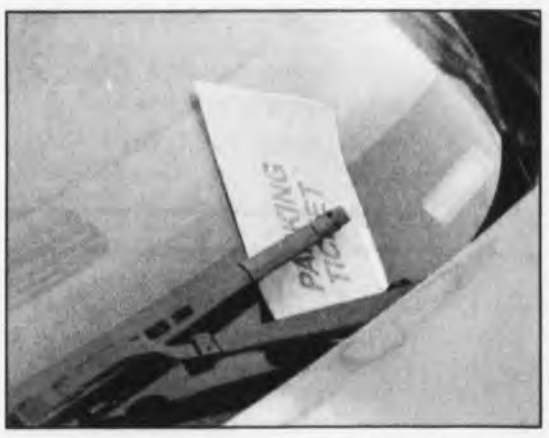
Got a parking ticket?



EXTRA in YOUR MARINER

The Fourth of July weekend is one of the busiest in Cohasset. Family and friends were visiting and activity at the harbor and Sandy Beach was at a peak. Each year, this busy weekend falls right after the town's annual all-facility sticker expires on June 30. The result is many residents receive parking tickets for parking on Government Island in the harbor and Sandy Beach. These areas are resident-only parking with a sticker.

"We've certainly seen a rush coming in the past few days," said interim Town Manager Jennifer Oram. The Town Manager's Office handles all appeals of parking tickets.

If you got a ticket
If you got a ticket on your car and you feel it was not just, it can be appealed. The Town Manager's office at Town Hall handles the appeal process. All parking violations must be paid or appealed within 21 days of issue. Appeals must be in writing. A form is available online at www.cohassetmass.org or at the Town Manager's office. If appealing by mail, a copy of the ticket/notice must be included in the appeal request as well as a self-addressed stamped envelope. The written appeal should state your case clearly and concisely why you believe that you should not be held accountable to pay the parking ticket(s) in dispute. Maps, drawings or photographs can be included to support your case. Appeals will be approved or denied within 30 days.

One-time only
In the case of being a Cohasset resident, but neglecting to get the all facilities sticker by June 30, it is a one-time only reason to appeal a parking ticket. Oram said this reason cannot be used for future violations and she keeps a record of who has appealed parking tickets.

Other parking violations
Parking in a handicap spot, parking on the street overnight during the winter (potentially hindering public safety vehicles and snow plows), parking the wrong way on the street or obstructing fire lanes are considered serious parking violations and are rarely overturned, Oram said. Often vehicles get tagged for parking over the time limits in the village as well.

Source of revenue
According to the 2010 Town Report, last year the town brought in $17,700 parking fines in revenue for the town.

Aquarion calls for voluntary water conservation

Aquarion Water Company is asking customers in North Cohasset to voluntarily reduce their water consumption. Since Memorial Day weekend the Company has experienced high water demands during the hot and dry periods. The higher demands are due primarily to watering of lawns through irrigation systems.

The Company is requesting all customers with irrigation systems, both permanent and temporary, to use water wisely. This means limiting the use of an irrigation system to no more than two days per week, before 6 a.m. and after 6 p.m., and ensuring the system is operating properly.

In the event the water demand is not reduced immediately through voluntary measures, the Company will be forced to reduce the water demand through mandatory water restrictions. The water restrictions imposed in 2010 banned the use of sprinklers and irrigation systems, and only allowed watering and outdoor water use on an odd/even basis between 6 and 9 p.m. using hand-held watering devices only.

Aquarion Water Company of Massachusetts, an Aquarion subsidiary, is the public water supply company for some 18,500 homes and businesses, including Millbury, Oxford, Hingham, Hull, and North Cohasset.

For additional information and conservation tips call the Aquarion's Customer Service Department at 1-800-928-3734, or visit www.aquarion-water.com.

POLICE BEAT

Rash of car breaks being investigated

By Mary Ford
mford@wickedlocal.com

The Cohasset Police Department is still investigating a rash of car breaks, which occurred during the early morning hours of July 4.

At about 2a.m on the 4th, the police department's emergency dispatch center received a call from a resident of Fern Way reporting that an unknown man had entered her vehicle. Officers responded to the area of Fern Way but were unable to locate the suspects, police said.

During the course of the investigation, officers discovered that 21other vehicles were entered and hundreds of dollars in electronics were stolen from unlocked vehicles. The electronics include iPhones and other cellular telephones, as well as GPS units. Also taken was loose change. Police said some of the vehicles had the keys in the ignition or on the floor mat.

The suspects also emptied out the glove boxes and appeared to have rifled through the contents quickly, tossing the documents out of the window as they drove off. Police are processing the documents for fingerprints.

The breaks occurred on Fern Way, Red Gate Lane, Bow Street, and Nichols Road. Cohasset detectives are investigating all of these cases.

Two weeks ago, several cars were broken into on Sanctuary Pond Road and Fairoaks Lane. All of these vehicles were unlocked as well.

Police ask that residents report any suspicious people or vehicles that they notice in their neighborhood, especially after dark.

Police said the suspects apparently did not try to break into any locked cars in the affected neighborhoods.

Safe found

Police have located the safe stolen from the Village Greenery on Saturday. The safe turned up on a beach in Hull without its contents.

On Saturday (July 2), at about 8:15am, Cohasset Police officers responded to a report of a recent breaking and entering of the Village Greenery.

The owner of the business was reporting that a large safe were stolen from his business. Cohasset detectives were able to determine from area surveillance tapes that the break occurred sometime during the early morning hours of July 2nd, and was perpetrated by two suspects who were masked. Police said the safe contained more than $15,000.

Area police departments were asked to notify the Cohasset Police Department if they found safe, which had been bolted to the floor of the store. Hull police notified Cohasset on Tuesday that they had located the safe.

OUI charge

An 18-year-old Hull man is facing a drunken driving charge after he left the scene of an accident on North Main Street. Police received a report at 3:30 a.m. on Wednesday (June 29) from a caller who thought she had heard a crash near the common and saw a 2008 black Honda Accord take off. Police saw the vehicle driving into Joy Place and pulled it over. Police put the operator through field sobriety tests which he failed.

The teen was placed under arrest and charged with operating under the influence of alcohol; negligent operation; leaving the scene after causing property damage; and being a minor in possession of alcohol. Police said there were three cans of beer in the car. Police said left the scene after he damaged the bench at the corner of the common near Depot Court.

Flags taken

Nine state flags have been stolen from their poles at Veterans Memorial Park at the harbor, police said. The ties to the flags were cut. Information on which state flags were stolen was not immediately available. The theft is under investigation.

Scrap metal

A 28-year-old Abington man thought a pile of scrap metal on Crocker Lane near Graham Waste last week was debris that was free and for the taking. A caller notified police after seeing the operator of a gray pickup possibly taking steel covers. Police said the man was told the items were private property; they said it appeared to a legitimate misunderstanding.

MV crash

At about 1 p.m. on Tuesday (June 28) a 2005 Audi A8, operated by a 51-year-old Concord man, who was traveling from Spring Street to N. Main Street, hit a 2005 Ford Econoline van, operated by a 55-year-old Cohasset man, who was traveling on N. Main Street.

Police said the Concord man said he did not see the stop sign on Spring Street. The van, which had to be towed, careened onto the lawn of a South Main Street home. There were no reported injuries, police said.

Golf cart

A golf cart that was reported stolen from the Hatherly Country Club turned up on Parker Avenue near the Maritime building last week, police said. In the cart were two golf gloves, two golf towels and several golf balls. The cart was in good shape; the ignition key was missing. The incident is under investigation.

Verbal dispute

A motorist got into a dispute with a couple of bicyclists last week on Atlantic Avenue near Sandy Beach. Police said one of the bike riders veered into the travel lane in an attempt to avoid a catch basin. Yelling ensued and the dispute, which was verbal, continued in the Sandy Beach parking lot. Once the situation was explained – peace was restored, police said.

Chris Arnold joins Windham Capital

Chris Arnold of Cohasset has been appointed as vice president, client relationship management at Windham Capital. COURTESY PHOTO

Independent investment firm Windham Capital announced the appointment of Chris Arnold of Cohasset as vice president, client relationship management. Arnold brings more than 15 years of experience to this role and will focus on working with the team to develop and build business development efforts. He will also manage relationships with financial advisors and other intermediaries as well as select institutional clients. Arnold's appointment comes as the firm makes its proprietary Windham Investment Risk Cycle – a way to proactively measure and manage risk – available for the first time to private investors.

"Chris brings a powerful combination of business development success, relationship management expertise and a background in quantitative research to Windham Capital," said Stan Shelton, managing partner of Windham Capital. "Chris's experience, combined with Windham's proprietary approach of managing risk to maximize return through calm and turbulent markets, will prove invaluable in helping our clients as they navigate the changing global economy."

Prior to joining Windham Capital, Arnold served as regional director of Boston-based TS Capital, a distributor of asset management strategies to financial advisors and institutions. Before TS Capital, he was a vice president of BNY Mellon Asset Management where he developed and managed relationships with professional advisors, family offices and institutional investors. Prior to this, Arnold was a financial advisor at Bernstein Global Wealth Management's first office in Boston, where he advised high net worth investors and small institutions. Earlier in his career, he was national sales manager at Thomson Reuters where he oversaw the sale of equity research and quantitative services to institutional investors. Arnold earned a bachelor of science degree from Fairleigh Dickinson University and holds the Series 7 and 63 licenses.

"I look forward to building out this business to support advisors, consultants and other intermediaries involved in managing assets," said Arnold. "It's an exciting time to join Windham, given our research-intensive approach to meeting the challenges of today's more volatile markets, and the advent of ETFs as a way for us to provide efficient exposure to global asset classes," he said.

WHAT'S GOING ON HERE?

Historical Society museums open for summer

What
In addition to their headquarters in the Paul Pratt Building on South Main Street, the Cohasset Historical Society owns two historic buildings in the Village. The 1810 Captain John Wilson House and the circa 18th century Bates Ship Chandlery, now the Maritime Museum both contain a rich history of Cohasset's connection to the sea and what life was like two hundred years ago. The two museums are now open for the summer months. Both buildings are listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

Where
The museums are located side by side on Elm Street in the Village. They can be found roughly across from the former Cohasset Hardware building.

What's there
The museums provide a glimpse into the early history of Cohasset and its major historical events. The Wilson House, which was completely renovated and interpreted a few years ago, shows how a family might have lived in the early 1800s. The first floor is devoted to the life and objects of the Wilson family and how this one family fit in to the larger fabric of 19th-century Cohasset. Upstairs visitors get a glimpse of what life was like in the early 19th century.

All the artifacts are pre-1860.

Next door, the Maritime Museum has an outstanding display of maritime artifacts that show the seafaring history of Cohasset, including model ships, artifacts brought back or made on voyages and information on Minot's Ledge Lighthouses.

The Captain John Wilson House, pictured, is located on Elm St. in the village. The Maritime Museum is next door. Both museums give a glimpse into Cohasset history.

When to visit
The Museums are open Wednesday through Friday from 1 to 4p.m. and on Saturday from 10a.m. to 2p.m. For further information call the Historical Society at 781-383-1434. Admission to the museums is free, but donations are always welcome.

Sandy Beach closed for swimming mid-week

Beach could re-open for weekend

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

On the hottest day of the week, health inspector Tara Tradd had to head to Sandy Beach to tell the scores of beach-goers there the water was unsafe for swimming.

Each week the water off Cohasset's coast is sampled to ensure it is clean and free of pollution. On Wednesday afternoon, the results came back: enterococci level at Sandy Beach was 228; the max level for safe swimming is 104 colonies of enterococci per 100 milliliters of water. All other swimming areas, including nearby Sandy Cove and Black Rock Beach had near perfect results.

This week's results

Results indicate the number of colonies of enterococci per 100 milliliters (cfu/100mL).

Bassing Beach/Sailing Club	63
Yacht Club	10
Sandy Cove	<10
Little Harbor	<10
Sandy Beach	228
Black Rock Beach	10

Tradd re-sampled the beach on Wednesday afternoon, but results were not available by the Mariner's press time on Thursday morning. If the Wednesday sampling came back with lower bacteria results the beach could re-open for the weekend. (Check out website, www.wickedlocalcohasset.com, for updates on the status of Sandy Beach.)

The beach closing was bad news for local beach goers who flocked to the beach amid some of the hottest days the region has had this year. Other local beaches, including Nantasket in Hull, were open for swimming.

Each week, six local swimming spots are sampled to ensure the water is safe for swimming: Bassing Beach (from the Sailing Club dock), the Yacht Club, Sandy Cove, Sandy Beach, Little Harbor (near Cunningham Bridge) and Black Rock beach are tested weekly during the summer.

Swimming in polluted waters can cause beach goers to get sick. The most common health effects related to swimming in polluted waters could include ear infections, conjunctivitis and rashes. The most common ailment is gastrointestinal disorders, stemming from swimmers swallowing the water.

The beach sampling results for Cohasset beaches (and beaches across the state) are posted every on the Department of Public Health's website (www.mass.gov/dph). Testing results for all sampling stations are available on the Department of Public Health website dating back to the summer of 2002. If the water is unsafe for swimming flags are posted at Sandy Beach (red flag) and in the harbor (yellow flag), both flags have a crossed out swimmer on them.

Sheriff urges sign ups for free program

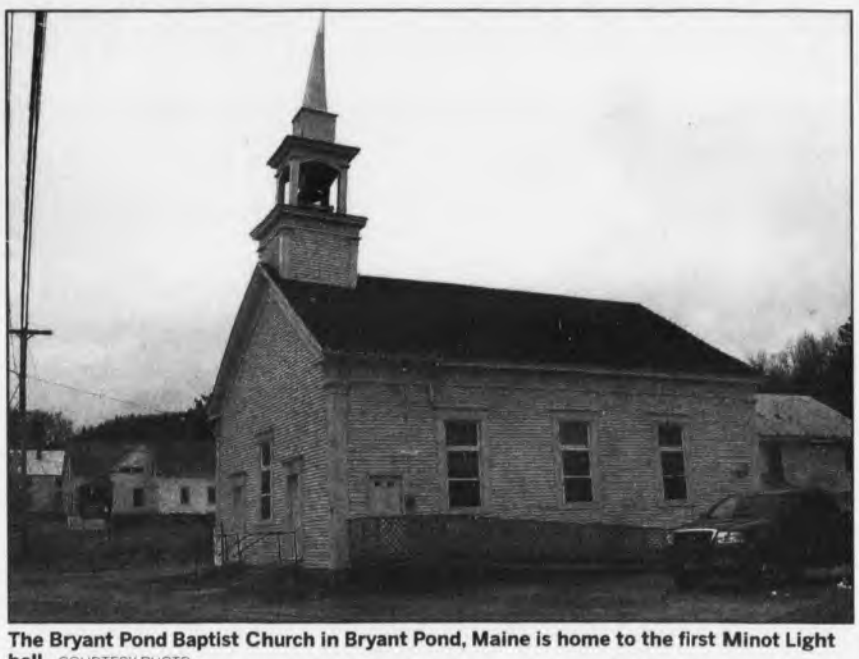
Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti's "Are You OK?" program for the elderly recently recorded its 77th save, and the sheriff is urging more people to sign up for it.

"The "Are You OK?" program provides someone to call you on the phone every day to check on your well-being," Bellotti said. "Even if you never need them to get help for you, it's comforting to know someone is making sure you're all right on a daily basis."

Each day, an "Are You OK?" officer places calls to people enrolled in the program at a mutually agreed-upon time. If the enrollee does not answer the phone or otherwise indicates that something is wrong, the officer can summon emergency medical help immediately.

A nationally recognized program, "Are You OK?" was introduced into Norfolk County by Bellotti in 2001. It is free of charge to participants. Since its introduction, Bellotti's program has summoned help for 77 people in need.

"The beauty of this program is that it helps elderly people maintain their independence in their own homes without sacrificing their safety," he said. "It also provides peace of mind to younger loved ones who worry about their elder relatives."



The program currently serves approximately 300 enrollees each day across Norfolk County.

"We have the capability to serve so many more. I hope more people will take advantage of this program," Bellotti said.

First Minot Light bell in Maine church

Lighthouse Digest highlights the history

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

Over the course of more than 160 years a fog bell has made its way from the uppermost part of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse to a woolen mill to a small Baptist Church in Maine. Some might say it's a bell with multiple lives.

While the Cohasset Historical Society has known the bell's history — even highlighting it in their most recent Minot's Light exhibit this spring — the story was recently re-discovered by the Bryant Pond Baptist Church in Bryant Pond, Maine. The discovery prompted a phone call to Lighthouse Digest magazine and then a feature article in that July/August edition of that publication.

"Although the facts have always been there, as time passed, the story was eventually forgotten," said Tim Harrison, editor of Lighthouse Digest.

According to town archivist David Wadsworth, the story of the bell begins in October 1850 when a 640-pound bell was placed in the uppermost part of the first Minot's Ledge Lighthouse just off the coast of Cohasset. The Cohasset Historical Society has a copy of the Coast Guard "Notice to Mariners" alerting the area to the installation of the fog bell by saying it would ring in the case of fog, snowstorms and other thick weather.

Just months later a tragic fate met that ill-designed lighthouse – and its two assistant Lightkeepers.

"It's one of the most interesting facts of the whole story that the bell was only on the first Minot for a short time before its collapse," Wadsworth said.

Built in 1848 to 1849 the first Minot Light was a lantern room atop nine legs driven into Minot's Ledge. The new design was substantially cheaper than the more typical granite lighthouses and Congress opted to try it out. The odd-looking lighthouse turned out to be not up to the challenge of New England's infamous nor'easters. In a severe April 1851 storm, the lighthouse toppled in the sea taking with it two assistant lightkeepers, Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine.

The pair had been placed in an untenable situation. They were marooned on the lighthouse with no boat to take them to shore. The head lightkeeper had taken them to the light, but then headed to Boston to purchase a replacement boat as their original one had been destroyed in a winter storm. Both Wilson and Antoine tried to brave the storm and the treacherous waters, but both perished in the frigid cold April waters and raging storm overnight.

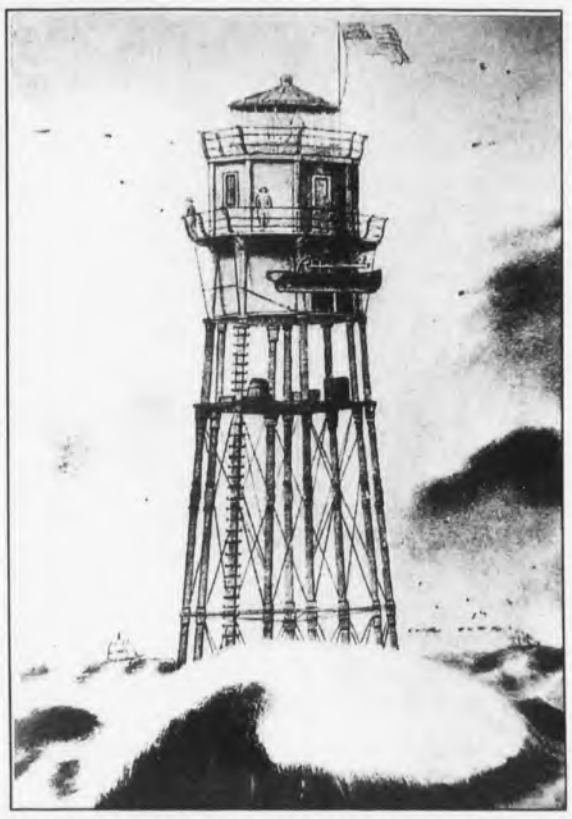
According to historical society records, the story captured national attention and earned a place in lighthouse lore.

The bell fell into the sea along with the lighthouse. Much of the first Minot's Light metal was recovered in the days following the storm, including the bell.

Through what was likely an auction or salvage sale, Francis J. Faulkner purchased the bell for his woolen mill in Turner, Maine. The bell was installed in the tower of Turner Woolen Mill and happily rung there for about 50 years.

In September 1905, a fire broke out in the mill. Faulkner ran to the top of the building to ring the bell and alert the townspeople and his employees. He lost his life in the fire.

The bell lost something too. It was found in the burned-down mill in a molten mass.



Faulkner's daughter, Anne Mont Chase, had the bell recast. She donated the bell to Bryant Pond Baptist Church in a memorial to her father. In 1906 the bell, now 816-pounds, found a new home in the belfry at Bryant Pond Baptist Church.

There are two inscriptions on the bell. One acknowledges that the bell was given to the church "in loving memory" of Francis J. Faulkner. Another notes the bell's former homes at the Turner Woolen Mill and Minot's Ledge Lighthouse.

The bell now tolls every Sunday to call parishioners to service.

Wadsworth said he knows of a few Cohasset residents who have made a pilgrimage to Bryant Pond, Maine to see (and ring) the storied bell.

Although the bell has been a part of two tragedies, Wadsworth does not believe the bell is a bad luck charm.

Built in 1848 to 1849 the first Minot Light was a lantern room atop nine legs driven into Minot's Ledge. COURTESY ILLUSTRATION

"It's been in Bryant Pond long enough – with nothing bad happening – so I would say no it's not bad luck," Wadsworth said.

It seems unlikely, if not impossible, for the bell to find it's way back to its original home in Cohasset.

"I would love to have it here, but know the answer is going to be no, so I'm not going to bother to ask," Wadsworth said.

A selection of the Historical Society's extensive collection of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse (both the first and second) artifacts and documents are on display at the Maritime Museum on Elm Street in Cohasset Village.

The Maritime Museum and the Captain John Wilson House, its sister museum located next door, are open Wednesday through Friday from 1to 4p.m. and on Saturday from 10a.m. to 2p.m. For further information call the Historical Society at 781-383-1434.

Historical information on the bell and lighthouse was provided by the Cohasset Historical Society and town archivist and historian David Wadsworth.*

Residents of The Golden Living Center, their families and staff members attended a ceremony in the Garden of Hope where a time capsule containing written messages will be buried under a newly planted birch tree.

Jeff Diminico, Executive Director of The Golden Living Center, buries a time capsule in the Garden of Hope on Saturday, June 18, 2011.

Time capsule symbolizes hope for future

Golden Living-Cohasset dedicated its new perennial garden as its Garden of Hope on June 18. The theme was chosen to represent the hope that all residents and patients, who come to the facility, have for better days ahead as part of their healing process. To symbolize hope for the future, a time capsule was buried as part of the ceremony

Residents, families, friends and staff were invited to place a small memento in the capsule before burial. It will be left to be dug up in the future by whomever decides to do so. Following the ceremony, a cookout and entertainment were enjoyed by residents, guests and staff.

COHASSET DRAMATIC CLUB

'Honk, Jr.' on stage this summer

First up this summer from Cohasset Dramatic Club's Summer Drama Workshop program is the musical "Honk! Jr.," the re-telling of the Hans Christian Anderson story, "The Ugly Duckling," with music by George Stiles and book and lyrics by Anthony Drewe. "Honk, Jr." will be presented from July 15 through 17 at the Town Hall Theater on Cohasset Common.

This show will feature a cast of 72 children, ages 8 through 13, representing towns across the South Shore. The story opens by introducing the odd-looking duck named Ugly and his quest to find his mother. Through his adventures, Ugly runs into an alluring cat who wants to eat him for lunch, a Bullfrog with the catchiest "pep-talk" around, and a swan named Penny who, after being tangled in some fishing line becomes Ugly's first like-minded friend. As winter turns to spring, Ugly's journey brings him back home having discovered friendship, a sense of himself and that being different doesn't mean being left out.

The cast is excited about being a part of this production. Sophie McLellan, 12, of Rockland, is returning to the CDC stage, having appeared in 2008's summer production of "Grease." Sophie plays Ida, Ugly's mother, this time around and thinks "it is a thrilling, wonderful and amazing experience to work with this talented group of people. It's so much fun to come together with new and old friends." Virginia Coffey, 9, of Cohasset, said, "The music and dancing are so much fun and definitely something you won't want to miss." Dylan Connolly, 11, of Cohasset, plays the role of Drake, Ugly's father, and describes his experience as "a great way to spend my summer. The cast is so much fun, and although the music is difficult and sometimes a bit frustrating, I'm totally up for a challenge."

"Honk, Jr." is directed and choreographed by Lisa Pratt of Cohasset, and music directed by Mark Bono of Milton. The rest of the production team is rounded out with stage manager Bill Stiles of Easton, and seven teen production interns John Demick of Cohasset, Alex Huntington of Scituate, Andrew Lemieux of Scituate, Faith Porter of Cohasset, Logan Pratt of Cohasset, Molly Rafferty of Scituate, and Julia Thompson of Cohasset.

"Honk, Jr.," presented by Cohasset Dramatic Club in cooperation with Cohasset Recreation Department, will be performed at 10 a.m. and 7 p.m., on Friday, July 15; 7 p.m., on Saturday, July 16; and 2 p.m., on Sunday, July 17, at Cohasset Town Hall Theater, 41 Highland Ave. General admission tickets are $12, and can be purchased at Paperscapes, Cohasset Village, or by calling CDC's ticket reservation line at 617-697-2115. Tickets may also be purchased the day of the show one hour prior to show time at the box office. For more information go to www.cohassetdramaticclub.org.

Cohasset youths attend seminar in Ireland

Jay Salerno, Daniel Barnes and Trevor Schramm of Cohasset, students at Boston College High School, were 3 of 17 students, who traveled to Dublin, Ireland for a two-week seminar in late April. The seminar focused on the rich and fascinating interchange of literature, politics, history, art, theater and sports in the Republic of Ireland.

Salerno, while in Dublin, stayed with Jack Hitchcock's family, Barnes with Jonathan Ho's family, Schramm with Robert Fenlon's family, their host parents. They attended classes every day at Belvedere College S.J. The group explored the dynamic city of Dublin and environs. Highlights included: Trinity College, University College Dublin, Glasnevin Cemetery, The Irish Parliament, The National Museum, The Royal Dublin Society Rugby Grounds, and St. Patrick's Cathedral. The group was delighted with an overnight side trip to Galway.

Participation in Belvedere's unique "Community Care" program allowed the boys to continue the Jesuit tradition of service and justice for all. Patrick McAllister of the English Department and Michael McGonagle, Vice-Principal for Ignatian Mission and Identity led the program.

Boston College High School is a Jesuit, Catholic, college-preparatory school for young men founded in 1863. The school enrolls approximately 1500 students from more than 100 communities in eastern Massachusetts. For more http://www.bchigh.edu to pre-school, playground, summer xtreme, volunteer as CITs (counselors in training), and then they start working for us. We really get to know each child," Carroll said. Carroll is one of those campers who "grew up" in the Cohasset Recreation program. "Personally as a former camper and counselor, we are working to make this program the best 'camp' around."

Sara O'Keefe, mother of Tedy O'Keefe, a third year participant in the Cohasset Rec summer program, said for her son the summer program is the place to be.

"He absolutely loves it. He is up and at 'em first thing in the morning on camp days," O'Keefe said. "And in the afternoon he's exhausted."

As an only child, O'Keefe said her six-year-old loves being able to play with other kids and counselors, especially sports.

Last week, the Boston Bruins street hockey clinic came to Cohasset Rec.

"He brought his own hockey stick, so he could play with the Bruins," O'Keefe said, adding the program is very affordable compared to other programs in the area.

"You can get the whole summer for the cost of one week at another camp," O'Keefe said.

The program is open to residents outside Cohasset and Debra Clements of Scituate has sent her two kids, Alex, 10, and Emily, 8, to the playground program this year.

"The counselors are upbeat, friendly and really engaging. The kids are kept very busy," Clements said. The kids are making new friends in Cohasset along the way. "It's been nice for them to meet different kids and they are having a great time."

More information about the Recreation Department can be found at www.cohassetrec.com, or at their office at Town Hall. Cohasset Recreation is also making frequent updates to its Facebook page; search for "Cohasset Recreation" and add them as a friend.

MAKING MUSIC IN COHASSET

Perfect place for musician, record producer

By Sara Hollingshead
shollingshead@wickedlocal.com

Since abandoning the corporate world to pursue his passion of music — musician and Executive Producer of Alchemy Records, Jon Durant, has never looked back. Durant established Alchemy Records in Cohasset as a way for him to produce music he enjoyed while still being able to spend time with his family.

Durant has been involved in music for his entire life. When he was a student at Cohasset High School from 1978-1982, Durant was a member of the Jazz Band and reflects on his time in Jazz Band as "a creative time in the musical history of CHS." Following his graduation at CHS, Durant attended Berklee College of Music for a short period of time. In his time at Berklee, Durant worked at and saw many Berklee graduates perform at weddings and he recalls, "I didn't like playing enough to play things I hated; I wanted to play things I wanted to play," and as a result he transferred to Emerson where he pursued a marketing degree.

Before establishing Alchemy Records in 1996, Durant worked in a variety of jobs — all of which focused around music. From a marketing manager at Lexicon, to handling artist relations and a position at NAD electronics, the experience, knowledge and contacts Durant gained before 1996 provided Durant with a strong foundation for his endeavor into his own record label.

Although Durant says the audience for the instrumental music he produces is nowhere around here, Cohasset provided Alchemy Records with a perfect location. Durant comments, "If a band wants to do a project, the best thing to do is go to a secluded place. Furthermore, it helps to get your head out of the studio and the beaches are a perfect place to do so."

In establishing Alchemy Records, Durant said the most difficult aspect was learning the legal portion of a record label and how to be beneficial to the artist rather than only the record label. As the executive producer for other artists, Durant makes financial decisions and puts the plan for a record together, but lets the artist maintain creative control. As an artist himself, he must do everything when it's his album, which he says is an interesting dilemma because he's not going to "beat people's doors down for his own music, but is willing to do it for others."

As a musician and executive producer, Durant sees a record as a collection of material, a presentation of the entire process of creating an album and the artist's commitment. He believes every detail of the record is important — from the actual sound to the "Thank-you" in the CD booklet. Furthermore, Durant believes you must be true to yourself and thus, has one specific goal when creating music — he must make music he likes. Although he "hopes other people will like my music, if they don't that's okay too."

He sees the world of instrumental music as exciting; "I deal and work with unbelievable musicians who other musicians know but the rest of the world doesn't. It's an entire mindset that develops around the question, 'What are you doing that's cool?'"

In September, Durant will be releasing his seventh album, "Dance of the Shadow Planets," which was influenced by Salman Rushdie's novel, Shalimar the Clown. For Durant, this is his first album done in an "old school way," in which, all the musicians, including Durant (guitar), Caryn Lin (violin), Colin Edwin (fretless bass), and Jerry Leake (percussion) came together at Squam Sound in Ashland, New Hampshire and recorded the entire album within two days. Recording this album at a studio other than his own, Durant was able to focus on the music rather than the engineering aspect of recording an album. Durant wanted to create an album like this for a long time and said, "the album had to be done this way, and although it is a huge commitment of putting an entire band live in studio, it is hugely inspirational."

Although Durant has played with world-class musicians, he says the coolest thing he has ever done is play music with his two teenage sons, Matt and Harrison. He attributes part of it having to do with father's pride, but it is also exciting to "be playing real, yet challenging music with his own family and when somebody makes a mistake, nobody cares and we can just laugh it off. It's been such an amazing journey."

CHALLENGE TO HEDLUND

May seeks state senate seat

By Mary Jane Hanron
mjhanron@wickedlocal.com

Steve May

Believing that voters of Plymouth and Norfolk counties are not receiving representation they deserve, Democrat Steve May, 34, of Hull has filed papers with the state Office of Campaign and Political Finance to begin a challenge to Republican state Sen. Robert Hedlund of Weymouth in the 2012 election.

The president and executive director of The Forum on Genetic Equity — which according to its website, geneticequity.org, "was created in February 2010 to advocate for laws addressing issues pertaining to consumer protection, patient privacy and genetic discrimination in American life" — May said his focus is on health care, a genetic bill of rights, local aid, educational aid and transportation aid.

"People are not getting a fair shake," he said. "Bob has done a disappointing job in the community. The middle class is under threat and collective bargaining rights are being stripped away. It is problematic."

Asked if he was referring to disputes over collective bargaining nationally, May said he is concerned about collective bargaining in public and private sectors and believes rights were being violated currently in many places.

"Economically, we are in a moment of crisis," he said. "The Senate provides interesting opportunities. It is a smaller and more collegial body where it would be easier to make a difference. Every meaningful decision in Massachusetts is made in the Democratic caucus room. We don't even have a voice there and we should."

"People are not getting a fair shake. Bob has done a disappointing job in the community. The middle class is under threat and collective bargaining rights are being stripped away. It is problematic."
Steve May

May has lived in Massachusetts for three years. His home was in Braintree before he and his wife Amy moved to Hull. A trained clinical social worker, he said he is suited for work on Beacon Hill because he understands the mental health system and drug and alcohol programs both as a practitioner and a policymaker.

Originally from Connecticut, May attended Ithaca College and holds master's degrees from the University of Vermont and University of Rhode Island.

His interest in health care topics arises in part from is early childhood home in East Lyme, Conn., where his mother was one of the first people to be diagnosed with Lyme disease, giving him an understanding of the medical system, necessary research and studies.

May held a school board position in Vermont, and also worked as a legislative fellow for then-New York Democratic state Sen. Seymour Lachman. While in Lachman's office, May assisted families affected by the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, in which 150 constituents died.

Since filing papers to run for office in 2012, May said he is pursuing support from the traditional Democratic base, including labor unions and environmental organizations. Later in the campaign season, May hopes to have a series of listening tours in a format similar to town meetings.

"People who think they own the truth are in the wrong place," he said. "I want to have meaningful conversations. Public life should not be just for show; not be sincere. Candidates should be real and authentic."

When Hedlund was reelected in 2010, he did not have Democratic opposition, as he defeated independent Paul Kearney. Regarding a potential challenge from May, Hedlund said, "Competition is good for our system and I look forward to getting to know Steve May. It will be a pleasure to welcome him to our table of conversation."

New chair for Planning Board

Moore steps down from role after more than 20 years

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

"Our primary mission is to maintain the character of the town...people move to this town because it's a wonderful place and we want to maintain that quality of life."
Stuart Ivimey, new chairman

After more than 20 years as the chairman of the Planning Board Al Moore has hung up his gavel.

The Planning Board named a new chairman, Stuart Ivimey, at its meeting on June 29.

When reached last week, Moore reflected on his long tenure as chairman, but looked forward to taking on the role of "member."

He became the chair of the Planning Board during his first term as an elected Planning Board member and year after year accepted the nomination as chairman. He will reach the quarter-century mark as a Planning Board member in 2012.

"Some would say it's been too long!" said the often self-effacing Moore. "I think I run a pretty good meeting and people I think recognized that."

Moore said the past few years have been trying ones to be a planning board member, and especially for its chairman. The two wind turbines applications that have come before the board both have had long, contentious and well-attended public hearings. As chair, Moore had to keep the meetings in order and discussion on point, a difficult task given the complexity of the projects themselves and strong feelings coming from all sides.

"Times have changed and (being on the planning board) is not as much fun as it used to be," Moore said. "People often forget we do this out of the goodness of our heart."

Often the Planning Board's decisions are appealed and the town – and the board's members – end up in litigation.

The increased regulations and state mandates have made the planning board's job more difficult over the past two decades. Moore praised planning board administrator Jo-Ann Pilczak for keeping the board on top of everything.

"If it weren't for her we'd be a complete disaster," Moore said.

Upon reflection, Moore said it might be better for a board as a whole to rotate through the chairmanship.

"I think it makes for a stronger board," Moore said because each individual would have a greater knowledge of the workings of the board.

As a member, Moore is looking forward to taking on a greater role in the debate and discussion for applications and projects.

"As chair I always thought it was my role to sit down and shut up...I've often kept my feelings in the background and let people say their piece," Moore said.

The planning board has a group of fairly well-seasoned members, with all but one with a few years under their belt.

The new chairman, Stuart Ivimey, is in this eighth year on the planning board and has multiple years of experience as a chairman. He served in that capacity for the Community Preservation Committee for more than six years.

Ivimey aims to keep the Planning Board on an even keel and said he is fortunate to have a good group of people on the board.

"The primary job of the Planning Board is dealing with the development obligations before us. The majority of our time will be spent studying these things appropriately and coming up with well thought out, well reasoned and fair decisions," Ivimey said.

He sees the board's role as finding a balance between the community at large, abutters, and individual property rights – and knows sometimes all sides can't be accommodated.

"Our primary mission is to maintain the character of the town...people move to this town because it's a wonderful place and we want to maintain that quality of life," Ivimey said.

Coming down the pike could be more commercial development in the village. Several years ago the Planning Board spent a year evaluating and re-writing the zoning bylaws for the village business district.

"We want to see high-quality, well thought out additions to the downtown area," Ivimey said.

Although the decision to step down from the chairmanship was a difficult one – and one done with a lot of careful thought – Moore said an even bigger decision lies ahead.

Moore has one more year left on his term on the Planning Board. In 2012, he will have completed 25 years on the board.

BEAR HILL

Essentially, he said, Verizon would adopt the current contract with AT&T. Verizon has been in the background on the project all along and intended to become a second cell service provider at the site, but now would take the lead, DeCaprio said.

The eventual contract with Verizon would be nearly identical with the current contract with AT&T and include the construction of the road off Reservoir Road. AT&T had agreed to pay for the access road, which they would use during construction of the antenna and its associated equipment as well as monthly routine maintenance visits.

"We're in the process of negotiating the contract," DeCaprio said. Verizon originally responded to the town's Request for Proposals for cell antenna installations on the Bear Hill water tank several years ago, DeCaprio said.

Meanwhile, the Water Commission and the town are still dealing with a lawsuit brought forward by a group of 10 residents. The construction of an access road near what the residents said was a dangerous curve in Reservoir Road has been a contentious issue over the past few years, in addition to concerns about the cell antenna.

In December, a group of 10 taxpayers, who are Reservoir Road or Pleasant Street residents, filed a legal action against the town alleging wrongful expenditure of town funds. In mid-December, a Norfolk Superior Court judge denied a motion for preliminary injunction. The judge found that it was unlikely the residents would be able to establish standing if the motion moved forward.

The residents have filed a voluntary motion to dismiss the legal action. The town has responded with a request to dismiss the legal action with prejudice.

"We don't want the lawsuit coming back. It was frivolous and a waste of time and money," DeCaprio said. If the suit is dismissed with prejudice, the residents lose their right to appeal.

Virginia Brophy, attorney for the 10 Cohasset residents, confirmed her clients had filed a voluntary motion to dismiss the legal action, but declined to comment further.

The ultimate decision lies with a Superior Court judge.

The suit has cost the town more than $20,000 in legal fees, DeCaprio said. In total, the entire Bear Hill water tank, cell antenna and access road issues has cost the town $33,917 in legal fees.

In fiscal 2011, DeCaprio said the Water Commission has spent $57,081 in legal fees.

OUR VIEW

On the mend

Many of you would recognize one of our intrepid photographers, Laura Sinclair. She has a shock of short, blonde hair and is almost always smiling. She takes photographs for the Cohasset Mariner at myriad events and has become a familiar figure around town.

Laura's name graces the pages of the Mariner nearly every week – some of her photos are "wild art" (standalones), others go with features or news stories and still others make up photo pages, dubbed "spreads," in newspaper lingo.

Laura was on the job on Saturday night photographing the annual Hingham Lions Club fireworks and family festival for the Hingham Journal, one of the Cohasset Mariner's sister newspapers. At some point during the event, she lost her footing, fell and broke her leg in three places.

Although a public person in terms of her job – Laura is a private person but did share news of her accident with her co-workers and on her Facebook page.

Therefore, we feel comfortable sharing this news with you in the hope that some of our readers would send along Get Well cards for Laura. Laura thrives on positive energy and we know that some well wishes from our readers would make her feel good.

If you would like to send a card to Laura, please send it to her attention in care of the Cohasset Mariner office. We will make sure they are delivered to her. Please address as follows: Laura Sinclair, Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham, MA 02043.

Laura may be "on the mend" for two-to-three months. We are going to miss her terribly but most importantly we want her to take the time to heal properly.

Knowing Laura as we do – we know she will be anxious to get back to work. When she is out and about with her cameras interacting with our readers at various events – she is a terrific ambassador for the Mariner.

We have always admired people who bring enthusiasm and energy to their "job." Laura's calling is photography – where she has a gift. We appreciate her sharing that gift with us.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Great race for athletes, spectators

Thank you Cohasset — another fantastic effort!

Jarrod Shoemaker, who placed 1st in the Pro/Elite field last Sunday, said it best after the race, "Cohasset is an incredible event. The preparation, the setting, the community help, and all the volunteers make this race the standard every other race is shooting for."

Our quick success on the national circuit would not be possible if it weren't for the tremendous work of my Race Coordinators who share the same passion as I do to deliver a great race for the athletes and spectators. They include Sigrid Burnett, Christian Cunnie, Suzy Doherty, Dave Dornaus, Anthony Everett, Matthew Herndon, Mike Hughes, Joe Mahoney, Catherine O'Callaghan, Donald St. Sauveur, Kate Simmons, and Deb Thomas.

I am very lucky to have the highly talented Cohasset safety/medical team on my side. People like Chief Silvia, Chief Deluca, Lt. Quigley, Lt. Dockray, Harbormaster Gibbons and their staff are first class.

I owe a very special thanks to the Sandy Beach Association, the Department of Public Works, and the Little Harbor crews who used valuable resources and time to ensure the beach and roads were in safe condition for the triathlon.

The triathlon is a fantastic example of one town pulling together to showcase the best it has to offer. I am proud the event helps support local people in need through the Cohasset Food Pantry and I have no doubt that year over year the triathlon will continue to bring commerce to our town and build our reputation as a "must see" stop for visitors on the south shore.

We all should feel proud of the incredible event we delivered last Sunday.

Thank you, Bill Burnett, 11 Linden Dr.

LEGISLATIVE UPDATE

Senate bill on interlock ignition devices

The following is a press release from State Sen. Robert Hedlund's office.

The Transportation Committee held a public hearing on Tuesday June 14th, among the agenda items was Senate Bill 1746, "An Act Relative to Ignition Interlock Devices," sponsored by Senator Hedlund and co-sponsored by seven legislators.

The bill is aimed at requiring the use of ignition interlock devices, so called because they prevent the operation of a motor vehicle while the driver is under the influence, for first time offenders. Currently 27 states require the use of ignition interlock for first time offenders, and statistics have shown that these devices reduce DUI recidivism by as much as 64 percent according to Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD).

As of 2009, when the ignition interlock program was first used for repeat DUI offenders in the Commonwealth, only 2 of the over 533 who have completed the interlock program have been rearrested on OUI charges. Forty-nine other states require the use of ignition interlock devices for repeat offenders, with programs effectively cutting recidivism.

"Statistics have shown that about one-third of those drivers arrested on DUI/OUI charges will become convicted repeat offenders," said Senator Hedlund. "The interlock program in the Commonwealth has a proven track record. Senate Bill 1746 continues the good work of Melanie's Law and will be even more effective in keeping Massachusetts roadways safe from drunk drivers."

The bill is aimed at requiring the use of ignition interlock devices for first time offenders.

Senator Hedlund offered testimony in support of Senate Bill 1746, along with MADD and other concerned citizens. "Every repeat offender was a first-time offender once," said David DeIuliis, the interim state director for Massachusetts Mothers Against Drunk Drivers (MADD). "If the objective is to reduce drunk driving and reduce repeat offenses, an easy way to do it is to take the first offense more seriously."

The legislation is awaiting the Transportation Committee's executive session, where they will recommend the bill as favorable, not favorable, or send to study. Senator Hedlund is anticipating a favorable report from the committee, and looks forward to advancing Senate Bill 1746 to the Senate floor.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund represents the Plymouth and Norfolk District that includes Hingham.

New operation up and running

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Jacobs Meadow Outfall Project — Last week we described the "brains" of the Town's new vertical sluice gate at the harbor. Once the new control system had been checked out, the contractor removed the last vestiges of the "old" system that controlled the inflow/outflow between the harbor and Jacobs Meadow during construction.

Let's take a brief look into the past. The first photo shows how the outfall from Jacobs Meadow looked prior to the start of this project. There are three large pipes that let water flow into the harbor. From left to right in the photo there is a large cast iron flap gate on a 66 inch diameter pipe, a self regulating tide gate of on a 48 inch diameter pipe, and last of all another cast iron flap gate mounted a 48 inch diameter pipe. All three of these pipes now exit into the triangular-shaped gate chamber, from which they can flow to the harbor controlled by a new vertical sluice gate.

During construction the center underground pipe was closed by inserting a large rubber bladder into the pipe. The bladder was then inflated like a balloon, closing off that pipe and stopping the flow of water so that construction could take place. Now that the construction is drawing to a close, the bladder had to be deflated so it could be removed from the pipe. As you might imagine, the bladder was not lightweight and a crane was needed to hoist it out of the chamber, as seen in the second photo. Even deflated it looked like an 8 foot long black hot dog.

The 66 inch and the 48 inch cast iron flap gates were left in place during the construction. They were held closed or manually opened as needed to control or stop the flow of brook water into the gate chamber. They, like the bladder, had to be removed from their respective pipes, since they were no longer needed. Just like the bladder, a crane was used to remove the flap gates. This was a bit dicey, since they were quite heavy and had to be lifted through open spaces in the steel beam grid work that supports the floor grates on the gate chamber. It was a bit like threading a needle, but it came off without a hitch. The gates were then loaded onto the contractor's trailer for their disposal.

A temporary dam had been previously installed in one of the underground pipes, that had to be removed. The access for this work was through a manhole located in the driveway entering the back of the Cohasset Harbor Resort. One of the contractor's workers was assigned the task of climbing down into the subterranean chamber to dismantle the dam. However, we couldn't find a convenient way to get into the pipe to show you a picture of his work. So, you'll just have to take our word for this one.

So, where does that leave us? As we write this article, the system is actually operating by itself, and appears to be operating as intended. The emergency notification system is up and running. This will dial the police emergency line with a notification should the water in the channel get too high or if there is a prolonged power failure. There are still a few things that needed to be done by the contractor. We continue to monitor the gate operation closely as well as the balance of work that the contractor needs to do to complete his project responsibilities.

HEDLUND REPORT

Case against Aquarion rate increase

BOB HEDLUND

Aquarion customers already pay some of the highest water rates in the state for water that is in many cases subpar.

As you have heard, the Aquarion Water Co. has filed a rate hike proposal with the Department of Public Utilities. If Aquarion's full request is approved by the DPU, Aquarion customers in Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset can expect to see an increase of 16.5 percent on their monthly water bill.

This is not the first time in recent history that Aquarion ratepayers have seen their water supplier apply for a rate hike. In 1996, when Mass.-American Water owned the utility, ratepayers saw their rates jump 154 percent (Federal mandates were partly to blame). In 2001, ratepayers were subject to a 10.7 percent hike (after the utility proposed a 16.7 percent increase). Most recently, in 2008, Aquarion proposed a 24.7 percent rate increase and was granted an increase of 21.4 percent.

Aquarion claims that the rate increase is the result of infrastructure improvements that have been made since the last rate hike went into effect in 2009, as well as the rising costs of health care, pension costs and other overhead expenses. As a small business owner, I am sympathetic to the impact that health care, fuel and other costs can have on the bottom line.

However, tucked away in hundreds of pages of regulatory filings is the fact that Aquarion investors expect to see a 6.3 percent annual return on their investment this year. If the proposed rate hike is accepted, that figure will jump to a whopping 11 percent.

It is preposterous that investors in any company should expect a guaranteed 11 percent return on an investment in this economic climate. For a monopoly such as Aquarion to propose a 16.5 percent rate hike so that it can add an additional 4.7 percent return to investors is borderline usury. The bottom line is that ratepayers will see their water bills increase by 16.5 percent, and as a result Aquarion investors will see their investment return increase by 74 percent.

Another important aspect of Aquarion's filing is that the company does not promise any improvements in service, water quality or infrastructure as a result of the rate hike. Many Aquarion customers in my district find the water to be foul-smelling and undrinkable. I have heard from a number of constituents that have been forced to install permanent water filtration systems on their houses as a result of the water quality.

Aquarion customers already pay some of the highest water rates in the state for water that is in many cases subpar. The company should not be allowed to further fatten its bottom line at the expense of already-exploited ratepayers.

I have seen enough utility rate increase requests to know how they play out. The utility shoots for the moon knowing that they won't get the full amount of the request, but that they will be granted something close to what they would like. Traditionally, the DPU has been likely to oblige the utility, and will knock a few percentage points off of the initial proposal in order to show "due diligence" while giving the utility most of the initial ask.

Based on the facts contained in the regulatory filings and the proximity to the last rate hike proposal, if there were ever a time for the DPU to reject a rate hike proposal outright, it would be now.

The DPU's charge in this instance should be to protect ratepayers, not fatten the wallets of investors and executives of Australian-based Macquarie Bank, the parent company of Aquarion. Accordingly, I urge the DPU to protect these ratepayers by rejecting Aquarion's rate hike proposal outright.

SENIOR SCENE

Penny candy at corner store

LOUISE SMULLEN

How many readers remember the corner store? There were two on the street where I grew up. I could see Griffin's store from my house. Although he carried meats, produce, canned and packaged foods, my family did not do its major shopping there. This is where my mother sent me to get a loaf of bread or one thing she might need for supper. The best things in this store were the ice cream freezer and a big glass case filled with bins of penny candy. My friend, Grace, and I would stand with our noses pressed to the glass with Mr. Griffin waiting patiently behind the counter while we made our choices – mint juleps, banana squares, long twists of licorice, Mary Jane's, and much more. Mr. Griffin had a little brown wooden bean pot with which he scooped up a penny's worth of jelly-beans or Boston baked beans. Not much was wrapped in those days.

Up at the next corner was a smaller store owned by a German couple. They made their own sauerkraut in a big wooden barrel. Our family often ate sauerkraut, and this is where my mother bought it, scooped from the barrel into a container. Most importantly there was also penny candy there.

At the corner where my street met the main street was the A & P. This is where we purchased our weekly groceries. When Grace and I started junior high in the seventh grade we had to go to school by trolley car, which made a stop opposite the A & P. When we came home from school we would often stop at the store and, for a nickel, would each buy a huge sour pickle that we chose from a large wooden barrel. These we would munch while walking home.

The part of town where I lived was really a "summer place." In that season of the year, quite a little distance along the main road, there was a dance hall and a theater where silent movies were shown. Across the street from the theater was Jenny Connell's, another corner store. Hers was what was called a dry goods store. She sold linens, pretty hankies and lovely shades of tissue paper – good for making May baskets. Like the other corner stores, she also sold penny candy. Quite often on a Saturday after Grace and I would go to Jenny's, each would buy a nickel bag of candy, then go across the street to the theater. For the large sum of a dime we saw Pathe News, coming attractions, a double feature, sometimes an "Our Gang" comedy and always a cliff-hanger. I suppose the latter would be like today's soap operas. We would have to go back the next week to see what happened. Some of the stars we saw were Clara Bow, Rudolph Valentino, and of course Charlie Chaplin.

The corner stores had been swallowed up over the years by malls and plazas. We do have a convenience store here and there, but one usually needs transportation to reach them. Besides, none of them have one of those great penny candy cases.

The seniors have had a busy month in June. June Bushee, manager of the Vision Rehabilitation Center of Mass. Eye and Ear Infirmary, spoke about help for using one's remaining visual capacity to its fullest. One in four people age 80 and over have macular degeneration. A cure for this is trying to be found.

Author Carol Morrissey spoke at one seminar. She told about a catastrophic accident she had, which resulted in her being in a full body brace for two years. This was when she began to write, as it was about all she could do. She brought with her a booklet of her poems titled "Feelings." Carol urges her listeners to find something new and challenging to do as a result of a sudden life change.

The June 12 presenter was Kathy Campbell, outreach coordinator for Prescription Advantage. This is a state-run insurance program that helps with prescription costs when one reaches the Donut Hole. If you would like to know more about this program, you may contact Carol Barrett at 781-383-9112.

Dr. Lisa Lewis of Cohasset Chiropractic was our last speaker. She had on display a plastic model of the vertebrae. She distributed charts that show how the nervous system runs from the brain down through the vertebrae and out to all parts of the body. Dr. Lewis likened good health to five spokes of a wheel – nutrition, exercise, sleep and rest – good mental attitude, and a properly functioning nervous system. If one of these spokes breaks down, it will affect one's health adversely.

Now on to fun and entertainment. One day Jean Hanson brought her third grade students to join us for lunch. It is always a delight to connect with these young people. After lunch they treated the group to a magic show. Many of the boys and girls looked quite authentic in top hats and magicians' capes.

We were treated to a great barbecue lunch at Scituate LifeCare. Other towns represented were Norwell, Marshfield, Scituate and Hull. During lunch we listened to tunes played on the accordion. A few hardy souls got up and danced to the music.

The very next day the Cohasset Police Department gave us a Father's Day barbeque at the Lightkeepers. They served up cheeseburgers, hot dogs, salad and dessert. Several policemen who were helping with the festivities were introduced. It's rather comforting to know they are taking good care of us.

Second language gives students an edge

Su Escuela expanding to Hingham

By the time the students at Su Escuela reach kindergarten, they will have an advantage; they are bilingual in Spanish and English. Since its establishment in 2003, Sandra Baldeon has worked to prepare students of all ages at Su Escuela for the global world. Baldeon believes that a system of immersion will prepare children for a successful future.

"If you can speak one language, you can speak five languages" Baldeon believes. "The brain thinks language is natural and it has so many benefits." After moving to the United States when she was around 17 years old, Baldeon herself enrolled in an immersion program and believes it is the easiest way to learn a language.

Su Escuela provides the opportunity for students to learn a second language. Students as young as 2 years old and range all the way to adult, attend full immersion classes throughout the week. Su Escuela's main goal is to provide language instruction to fluency.

At Su Escuela, the Spanish language is not the only thing that is taught; Baldeon explains that the Spanish culture is always present and celebrated. "When the kids walk in, the teachers greet them with hugs and kisses because that is what is done in Chile," Baldeon explains. "Every few days, for two and a half hours, they come to Chile."

Baldeon explains that at Su Escuela, students get a little something extra that will help them stand out in the future. Not only will they be bilingual, but learning other languages will also come easily. The ability to speak fluently in Spanish also builds the students' confidence, as they are able to help others communicate as well as connect with native Spanish speakers. Baldeon also believes that being bilingual will also encourage the students to travel the world in the future and seek out other cultures.

Teaching in a playful yet academic and structured way, the teachers at Su Escuela are able to engage the students in activities while also providing them with knowledge. "The children don't realize they are learning-they are just enjoying the time with their teacher."

Being bilingual used to be a luxury, but now, as countries' borders fade, the ability to speak another language is a need, Baldeon explain. The classes at Su Escuela allow students to build their knowledge so they are able to advance their knowledge of Spanish while also perfecting their syntax and Spanish accent.

Students at Su Escuela are more aware of the world and of other cultures Baldeon explains. They are curious and are always asking questions; they are so ready to learn so much.

Baldeon and the nine teachers at Su Escuela, all of who are from Chile, adapt the curriculum each year to fit the students' needs, as the program must provide the same level of education that the child is at and ready for. Each week is focused around a certain theme, and the teachers work to challenge students each week. "The program is playful in a different way; it's directed but the students will choose some activities and the teachers will just guide them."

Although parents are often scared that their child will not adapt or learn the language because they are monolingual, Baldeon explains that it is natural for kids to have to have a second language and that reinforcement at home is not necessary.

"Kids will appreciate this great gift the parents are giving them." Baldeon stated.

This month, Su Escuela is moving to Hingham, across from the Shipyard at Sgt. William B. Terry Drive. This move will allow Su Escuela to increase it services, which will include Boston's only Dual Immersion Kindergarten class, where 80 percent of the class is taught in Spanish and 20 percent is taught in English, further preparing the students for their future. All other classes at Su Escuela will still be a full immersion in Spanish.

The move, Baldeon explains, is something that people and the community were asking for. It will allow Su Escuela to improve its programs and offerings, while maintaining the immersion and small class sizes (less than 9 children per class, expect the Dual Kindergarten will have 12 students). Su Escuela will also be more accessible to people across the area. Baldeon explains that students come from all over — Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate, and Milton, and they by expanding to Hingham, Baldeon hopes to reach even more towns.

Open house at Su Escuela

An open house will take place from 5 to 7 p.m., on Monday, July 18, at the new Su Escuela Language Academy at 75 Sgt. William B. Terry Drive, across from Hingham Shipyard. There are four outdoor play areas, an indoor gym and 13 classrooms.

ADOPT $30.59 BILLION FISCAL 2012 STATE BUDGET (H 3535) House 150-2, Senate 33-4, approved and sent to Gov. Deval Patrick the conference committee version of a $30.59 billion fiscal 2012 state budget that increases Chapter 70 Education funding by $140 million, makes cuts in hundreds of programs, increases funding for others and uses $185 million from the state's Rainy Day Fund, leaving the fund with a balance of some $584 million. The plan also cuts local aid by $65 million but requires that reversions - unspent funds left over at the end of the current fiscal year - be sent to cities and towns to make up for local aid cuts. Another complicated and controversial part of the package is designed to address the skyrocketing costs of municipal employee health insurance. According to a joint statement by the offices of House Speaker Robert DeLeo and Senate President Therese Murray, the plan "allows municipalities to alter co-payments, deductibles and other plan design features so long as such features are no greater in dollar amount than those offered by the Group Insurance Commission (GIC) plan with the largest subscriber enrollment." The GIC is the state agency that provides health insurance to state workers including legislators. The statement also notes the plan does not alter collective bargaining rights associated with premium splits and leaves it up to cities and towns whether they want to implement plan design changes for employees. This final version of the budget does not include a House-approved repeal of a ban on gifts from drug companies to doctors or a Senate-approved measure to restrict the use of aversive therapy for some developmentally disabled individuals. Supporters said the budget is a fiscally responsible and balanced one that funds important programs to the best of the state's ability during this recession. They said it does not raise taxes or fees and closes a projected $1.9 billion deficit. Some opponents said the budget is fiscally irresponsible, includes wasteful spending and omits some $1 billion of savings proposals that were offered by the GOP. They argued many reasonable reforms that would have saved money and funded more local aid and other important programs were rejected. Others had various reasons for voting against the budget. Gov. Patrick has 10 days to review and sign the spending plan while issuing vetoes of any items he does not support. (A "Yes" vote is for the $30.59 billion budget. A "No" vote is against it.)	N	Y
COMBAT HUMAN TRAFFICKING (S 1950) Senate 37-0, approved legislation aimed at combating human trafficking. The bill creates the crimes of trafficking persons for sexual servitude and forced services and imposes imprisonment for up to 20 years and/or a fine of up to $25,000 for violations. If the victim is a child under 18, the prison sentence increases to up to life in prison. The measure also creates a Victims of Human Trafficking Trust Fund, funded from fines and convicted human traffickers' forfeited assets, to provide restitution to victims. Other provisions include increasing the punishment for individuals who pay prostitutes for sex; removing the statute of limitations for trafficking crimes; creating a 15-year criminal penalty for trafficking human organs; and a "Safe Harbor" provision that allows a court to judge an offender under 18 apprehended for prostitution - but found to be a victim of human trafficking - to be in need of services rather than simply delinquent. Supporters, noting Massachusetts is one of only four states without an anti-human trafficking law, said this long-overdue bill would crack down on loathsome people who sell human beings. They noted it is time for the state to step up to the plate because the federal government doesn't have the resources or will to combat this problem. The House has approved a different version of the proposal and a conference committee will likely craft a compromise bill. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill.)		Y
INCREASE MAXIMUM SENTENCE TO 20 YEARS (S 1950) Senate 35-1, approved an amendment that would increase the maximum penalty for human trafficking from 15 to 20 years. Amendment supporters said greater punishment is needed in order to crack down on offenders and begin to put a stop to this heinous business. Opponents offered no arguments. (A "Yes" vote is for the increase to 20 years. A "No" vote is against it.)		Y
"JOHN SCHOOL" (S 1950) Senate 36-0, approved an amendment that would impose a mandatory minimum fine of $1,000 on individuals convicted of paying a prostitute for sex ("johns"). The measure allows some first-time offenders to participate in a prevention program known as "John School" that would teach them about the dangers, health risks and other negatives of sex with prostitutes. Those who complete the program, at a cost to them of $750, would have the charges against them dismissed. The revenue would be split among the costs of running the program, the city or town that made the arrest and a Human Trafficking Trust Fund that provides restitution to victims. Amendment supporters said this would give some first-time offenders a second chance with the goal of reforming them and helping to stop the demand for prostitutes. (A "Yes" vote is for the amendment.)		Y
ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL "RIGHT TO REPAIR" BILL (H 102) - The Committee on Consumer Protection and Professional Licensure held a packed hearing on the controversial bill that would require auto manufacturers to sell to non-dealer repair shops the complete repair information and diagnostic tools currently only provided to franchised dealer service centers. The measure was approved by the Senate last year but died in the House. Supporters said auto companies refuse to give the information to independent repair shops, and consumers are forced to have repairs done at the more expensive dealer service centers. They argue this pro-consumer bill would lower the cost of repairs for consumers by fostering competition and allowing them to go to independent repair shops. Some opponents said the proposal would force auto manufacturers to disclose trade secrets and other proprietary information to their competition. Others argued independent shops already have access to most of the information they need to repair vehicles. MANDATE COVERAGE - The Financial Services Committee held a hearing on proposals that would require all health insurance companies to include coverage for colorectal cancer examinations (S 406); diagnostic screening for prostate cancer (H 2051); hearing aids (S 426); cochlear implants in children (S 421); tobacco use cessation programs (H 2048); and treatment of children with cleft lips and palates (H 2065).

HEALTH NOTES

Our debt to our children

STEVE BOBO

Lets face it, raising kids has never been easy. The responsibilities parents assume by creating offspring affects the health of both the parents and their progeny. Key to maintaining close relationships and open communications is to enhance the bond between parent and child. But, in these times, parents have other considerations. Nominal fears about rearing children, their training and education must be expanded to consider the creation of a modern ethical system embodying topics such as the disposal of wealth, an assessment of the importance of learning the properties of a number of substances which are becoming available to more and more youngsters and a system of ethics that explains the challenges of modern living; including the fact that crime and dishonesty harms everyone including the perpetrator. The media does not consider the Bulger fiasco in its most egregious element: That over a period of 50 or so years, Massachusetts was being stripped of literally billions of dollars that would otherwise be going into our tax base to pay for things such as schools and school teachers and better infrastructure in our most needy areas: the Bulger turf. It's hard enough normally to raise kids.

In a Web page, Robin McLure gives a few tips for raising our youth whatever their neighborhood.

Say I love you: Tell your child you love him every day – no matter his age. A simple "I love you" goes a long way to developing and strengthening a relationship.

Teach your faith: Teach your child about what you believe and why. Allow time for your child to ask questions and answer them honestly. Reinforce those teachings often by practicing them.

Establish a special name or code word: Create a special name for your child that is positive and special or even a secret code word that you can use between each other. Use the name as a simple reinforcement of your love. The word can have a meaning to your child and you that only you two understand. It might even be used to extract a child from an uncomfortable situation (such as a sleepover that is not going well) without causing undue embarrassment to the child.

Develop and maintain a special bedtime ritual: For younger children, reading a favorite bedtime book or telling stories may be remembered throughout their life. Neither should older children be neglected. Once children start reading, have them read a page, chapter, or short book to you. Even most teenagers still enjoy the ritual of being told goodnight in a special way by a parent – even if they don't act like it.

Let your children help you: Parents sometimes inadvertently miss out on opportunities to forge closer relationships by not allowing their child to help them with various tasks and chores. Unloading groceries after going to the store is a good example of something that children of most ages can and should assist with. Choosing which shoes look better with your dress lets a child know you value her opinion. Of course, if you ask, be prepared to accept and live with the choice made.

Play with your children: The key is to really play with your children. Play with dolls, ball, make believe, checkers, sing songs, or whatever is fun and interesting. It doesn't matter what you play, just enjoy each other. Let kids see your silly side. Older kids enjoy cards, chess.

Eat meals as a family: Eating together sets the stage for conversation and sharing. Turn off the TV and don't rush through a meal. When schedules permit, really talk and enjoy one another. It can become a quality time most remembered by young and old alike.

Seek out one-on-one opportunities often: Some parents have special nights or "standing dates" with their children to create that one-on-one opportunity. Whether it is a walk around the neighborhood, a special trip to a playground or a movie night. Engage each child individually.

Childhood obesity has more than tripled in the past 30 years. The prevalence of obesity among children ages 6 through 11 increased from 6.5 percent in 1980 to 19.6 percent in 2008. The prevalence of obesity among adolescents ages 12 through 19 increased from 5.0 percent to 18.1 percent.

Obesity is the result of too few calories expended for the food consumed, mediated by genetic, behavioral and environmental factors as well as immediate and long-term health impacts. Obese youth are more likely to have risk factors for cardiovascular disease such as high cholesterol or high blood pressure. In a population-based sample of 5- to 17-year-olds, 70 percent of obese youth had at least one risk factor for cardiovascular disease. Also, they tend to become obese adults, with more at risk for associated adult health problems.

Ensure that your plans with your family include a program of healthy lifestyle habits, including healthy eating and physical activity that lowers the risk of becoming obese and developing related diseases. Your children, as students, should have appealing, healthy choices in foods and beverages offered outside of the school meals program.

Change family behaviors. The most effective way to treat and prevent childhood obesity is to adopt healthier habits for the entire family. Rather than singling out your child, encourage the whole family to make healthy lifestyle changes.

Start small. Gradual changes are easiest to incorporate into daily routine and to maintain long term. Start by turning off the TV during dinner, switching from soda to skim milk or water, and taking a family walk after dinner once a week.

Set goals. Set realistic, measurable goals for each family member, and then determine family goals. For example, your child's goal might be to eat fruit for afternoon snacks. Your goal might be to take a brisk walk three days a week. The family's goal might be to limit fast-food meals to once a month.

Be prepared for situations that may tempt a fallback to old habits. If you're used to eating popcorn at the movies, for example, agree that you'll share a small carton of popcorn with your child rather than ordering separate treats.

Celebrate success. Offer praise when someone exchanges a bad habit for a healthier one.

Keep it positive. Focus on healthy lifestyle changes. Remember, treating childhood obesity isn't a race. Old habits take time to change. Be flexible. It'll take time to get used to healthier habits. Encourage everyone to stick to a plan.

New areas for necessary oversight: Because of new technology – cell phones, etc., the expanded access to many more individuals; more friends; with less known about them, the circle of friends needs oversight, as much as does the character of diets; with nourishment values changing in the food products we buy.

The game will be held at Veterans Memorial Stadium in Rockland, MA. The game will begin promptly at 7:30 p.m. with the gates opening at 6:15PM. Admission will be $5 for adults and $2 for children.

SAILING

Trivia fundraiser

The high school sailing team, a seemingly impossible dream of local parents and students just a year ago, had a phenomenal second season. It's time to start raising funds for season three.

A collaborative team consisting of students from Cohasset HS, Hull HS, and the South Shore Charter School, named the Nantasket Nor'easters, compete in the Massachusetts Bay League.

Thanks to the support and generosity of Sail Nantasket and the Hull Yacht Club, the team operates out of the yacht club sailing in the eight Club 420's which Sail Nantasket has purchased over the last several years.

With school athletic budgets facing both significant cuts and increasing costs, Sail Nantasket is relying on the continued generosity of the community to volunteer their time and talents in running the program and for donations.

Visit http://www.sailnantasket.org/noreasters to watch videos of the team in action and to learn more about Trivia Night.

To purchase the $25 tickets or to donate an auction item, please contact Joanne Pearson at jmocp@comcast.net or Lisa Campbell at lcampbell@hotmail.com

Holding their own

Shorthanded roster holds ground against top teams

By Mark Ducharme
Gate House News Service

No one could blame the Cohasset American Legion Baseball team from exhaling a sigh of relief.

Post 118 had to battle some of the top teams in Zone 6 East with a shorthanded roster and more than held its own as they battle for one of the five playoff spots in the league.

"We had two days off before we started the final week of the regular season," said Cohasset general manager Scott Arnold. "We have 17 points and we are guaranteed a playoff spot one way or another. When we started playing on Tuesday, we had our whole roster, 18 players. I believe very strongly that these guys can play with anybody."

Post 118 proved that it could play with some of the best in zone 6 East without a full roster.

They defeated first-place Morrissette, 7-2 and they ral-

Changes planned for Zone 6

Zone 6 is looking to get away from the tortures of rush hour scheduling in Amercian Legion Baseball schedule.

The 19-team, two-division district zone has elected to cut down its participation in the state tournament starting next year.

"The top two teams," said Holbrook general manager Bill Merrigan. "One on each side (Zone 6 East and Zone 6 West) will go to the state

POPPIN' OFF

Time catching up with faithful sports guy

WILLIAM WASSERSUG

Is it time to retire?

During the week I have been looking at photos from last week's Cohasset Triathlon and the Hingham July 4th Road Race and started wondering just what happened to my old athletic lifestyle.

The deep thoughts started when I looked at the Hingham race information and saw a 7 a.m. start for the race.

My first thought was why would anyone in their right mind get out of bed at 5 or 6 a.m. to go and run on a holiday. I practically threw a tantrum when my dad woke me up before 9 on Monday so we could take the kids and get breakfast before heading to the lake.

No, I am not a morning person.

If I had my way, we would skip mornings and head straight to noon.

To my view, 7 a.m. is still the middle of the night.

Still, I was ready to get out and get some exercise.

It started with a little catch with my nephew.

That's when I started getting a thought that I just might be a little out of shape.

After just a couple of throws, I was feeling like my arm was going to fall off. I chalked that up to playing lefty because we didn't have a righty glove, and I am right handed. Throwing with my left hand is not quite natural.

Soon I gave up the glove and played old-school. This time my arm didn't fall off.

Then came more fun when the kids decided to play the grown ups in wiffle ball.

I love wiffle ball, but got another reminder that I had just celebrated a 45th birthday when I tried to bend to pick up ground balls.

Not a pretty sight.

I think you could hear the

GOLF NOTES

South Shore Four-Ball has a new beginning

PAUL HARBER

Dolph Aimola will never forget how the South Shore Four-Ball got its start in fall of 1975 or how he became the tournament director.

"It was at the first round of the Southeastern Amateur," remembers the septuagenarian.

"I was with Roger Barry and the late Phil Farina."

For those who don't know or just arrived to our wonderful region, Roger Barry is the Godfather of Golf on the South Shore.

During his tenure as golf editor of the Patriot Ledger, he did more than just cover the game; Roger nurtured it and was responsible for the start of the region's top amateur tournaments.

He was a confidant to the top players and did so much for the game.

Farina was the owner of South Shore Country Club and did so much for the region, bringing in PGA Tour pros for exhibitions and making South Shore Country Club one of the top tracks in the state.

"We were looking at the leaderboard and I said there were only ten guys who could win the tournament. We were saying, 'what if you paired two of them together, who would win?' And that's how the South Shore Four-Ball came into being.

"Phil turned to me and, said, 'OK, you run the tournament.' And the next thing you knew, we had our first South Shore Four-Ball. We had about 50 teams." It a short-time, there were over 100 two-man teams vying for the title and it was one of the top events in the area, but when South Shore CC was sold and closed in 1985, the tournament ceased.

Eventually, the town of Hingham took the land by eminent domain and South Shore CC began a second life as a public facility. But not until recently has it blossomed into one of the premier municipal courses in New England. In fact, it will be holding the Massachusetts Public Links Championship in a few weeks.

Aimola returned to South Shore CC and operates the cart barn and is a starter. He also revived the South Shore Four-Ball. Last year Jim Forsgard and Mark Elbery won the title.

It will be held Aug. 5-6 and is open to all golfers. There is a men's gross and net division as well as a women's division. Anyone interesting in playing, call the pro shop at South Shore for more information.

Aikens makes quarterfinals

It was a good week for Pinehills GC golfer Herbie Aikens, who survived 36 holes of stroke play on last Monday and Tuesday and earned a spot in the Round of 64 at the U.S. Amateur Public Links Championship at Bandon Dunes (Ore.) Golf Resort.

Aikens fashioned rounds of 75 and 74 for a 5-over par 149 to finish tied for 34 overall and be one of 64 in the Match Play portion of the Championship, which began last Wednesday. Aikens advanced to the quarterfinals before being eliminated and his friends and family got a chance to see him on the Golf Channel's telecast where announcers compared Aikens to PGA Tour star Ernie Els

It has been a good year for Aikens.

The Pembroke native teamed with Ryan Riley of Norton CC to win their third consecutive State Four-Ball Championship and he earned a berth in last week's State Open. Unfortunately, it was involved in another event in Oregon and could not compete.

He is in the field for next week's State Amateur at Wyantenuck Country Club in Great Barrington.

Other golfers from the region scheduled to tee it up in the State Amateur are John Beadle, Scott Congdon, Matthew Degiorgio and Mark Metcalf of Foxborough CC; Steven Burak, Greg Chalas, Jim D'Ambrose, Richard Ellis, John Hadges, Ray Richard and Christopher Tarallo of Thorny Lea; Mike Calef of Brockton CC; Doug Clapp of Old Sandwich GC, Jeff Cutter of Dedham C&PC; Eric Daniel of Presidents GC; Joe Fitzsimmons and Jack McIntosh of Marshfield CC; Joseph Frew and Joe Harney of Granite Links GC; Jamie Griffiths of Pine Oaks GC; Andrew Harvey of Olde Scotland; Travis Kellegrew of Bay Pointe CC; James Magner of Plymouth CC, Christopher Melvin of Walpole CC; Matt Montt, Noah Walker, and Benjamin Spitz of the Harmon Club; GC; Taylor Peck, and Matt Sebet of Norfolk GC; Ryan Riley of Norton CC; Kyle Harper and William Taylor of Segregansett CC; and Brien Tolland of Sharon CC.

Calling all girl golfers

The ever-popular South Shore Girls' Jr. Invitational will be held Wednesday, July 20, at South Shore Country Club in Hingham.

Girls of all ages (even under 6) and experience levels are welcome!

There are three divisions: Mite Division for girls 9 and under. They will play 6 holes. Entry fee is $20 (includes gift, range balls, lunch, and prizes). Tee times start 9 a.m.

The Junior Division is for girls 10-13. They will play 9 holes. Entry Fee is $25 (includes gift, range balls, lunch, and prizes). Tee times start 9 a.m.

And, finally, the High School Division for girls ages 14 to 18. It is 18 holes (shotgun start 8:30a.m.) Entry Fee is $40 (includes gift, range balls, lunch, and prizes)

The Mite Division will have a chaperone for each group. Parents do not have to stay with the children.

For more information on the event, contact Sarah Whitney at the pro shop at 781-749-1747 or email srwhitney@email.wm.edu.

GOLFER OF THE WEEK

Meghan Khang, Harmon Club

The recent graduate of the Rogers Middle School in Rockland has had a busy summer vacation and it's only beginning.

Khang, 13, was involved in two high stakes events last week.

It began at Bellevue GC in Melrose, where Khang finished second after a three-hole sudden death playoff for the Massachusetts Women's Open.

She impressed a field of the best professionals and amateur women in the region.

Khang was tied for second after the first round with a 73 and then fashioned a 1-under-par 70 in the final round to tie for the lead with Ellie Dutch, who outlasted her in the playoff.

The day after the Women's Open, Khang competed against teenagers in the 36-hole New England Junior PGA Championship at Black Swan Country Club in Georgetown and easily won the title.

By winning, Khang qualified for the 36th Junior PGA Championship, Aug. 2-5, at Sycamore Hills Golf Club in Fort Wayne, Ind. Khang, 13, had a final-round 75 for a two-day total of 145 and an 11-stroke victory over Vinh-Hoa Ngo of Newton.

Meghan Khang is in the swing of things. GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE PHOTO

The Junior PGA Championship has traditionally been a stepping-stone for many of today's PGA and LPGA Tour professionals as well as current collegiate stars.

LEGION

lied from a 14-1 deficit at home and played to a 17-17 tie with Braintree as the game was called because of darkness after seven innings.

Cohasset also defeated Holbrook (17-3), but lost to both Milton (15-6) and Weymouth (14-7) as they finished 2-2-1 in a five-game, five-day stretch with only 10 players on their roster.

"We had a 10 man squad the whole week," Arnold said. "We had a group of kids that were in Kentucky building houses."

Post 118, made up of players from Scituate and Cohasset, in the final week of the season has two games with Jamaica Plain. The second one is on Saturday night at J.P. They will also face Morrissette and Stoughton in the final week of the season as they determine their postseason plan.

The key for Cohasset is on the mound where they have been successful for most of the season.

"Pitch for pitch," Arnold said. "Our starting rotation does a good job. All we had to do was survive and we did."

Pitching makes the difference. The age old debate does good pitching beat good hitting, absolutely."

Chase Michaud pitched a strong game in Post 118's 7-2 win over Morrissette as he was supported by a three-run first inning.

Jamie Timothy had three hits in the game including an RBI double in the seventh inning and Richard Roach had a two-run single in the game.

Timothy also had two-run triple as he drove in three runs in the 17-3 win over Holbrook and had three hits and two RBI in the loss to Weymouth.

Henry Lockwood pitched a complete game and scattered eight hits for the win over Holbrook, while Jeff Cavanaro, Roach and Tim Kensinger had three hits each and Kyle Dauphine added a two-run triple.

The key for Post 118 in its comeback, 17-17 tie with Braintree was the longball. Patrick Kearney clubbed a three-run homer and Andres Goetz had a two-run homer to spark the comeback for Cohasset.

Post 118 fell behind 8-0 because of errors and had too much of a hill to climb in its 15-6 loss to Milton.

In their most recent action, Morrisette downed Cohasset 10-1 on Wednesday night in Quincy.

BASEBALL

tournament, but the remaining teams will play within the district until the end of July.

"It was spearheaded by Westwood's Dick Paster. The two teams that go to the states will go back into district play if they are knocked out in the state tournament. There is an increase in the amount of games that will be played in the regular season."

The plan is for the winners of each division that will advance to the states to be decided at the three-quarter mark of the season.

The reason for the move is that the schedule for regional play in the state legion tournament and the state tournament itself has been pushed back causing a smaller window in which to get the regular season completed. There are teams that have lost games during the regular season because of postponements, because they have not been able to get their makeup games in because of the schedule.

The high school tournament does not start until the first week of June, which helps to shorten the season even more.

This year, Zone 6's regular-season schedule is just over five weeks long and the league's 10-team cross-over playoff will begin next week. Zone 6 has sent five teams that win in the playoffs to the state playoffs for a number of years.

It has forced a number of teams to play a high number of games in a short stretch because of rainouts or waiting for teams to be able to begin their season later after their respective runs in the tournament.

Cohasset, for example had a stretch of 13 games in 14 days, including five games in five days just before the Fourth of July Holiday after its run to the Div. 4 State title.

"I played Amercian Legion Baseball when I was a kid," said Cohasset general manager and founder Scott Arnold. "It was the elite program. We are still getting quality athletes, but you can't have 15 pitchers on your roster. You have to recruit a shortstop if you need one."

"We are extending the season," said Weymouth coach Mike Connelly. "You can't keep having seven games in six day situations for your team during the season."

The decision will change things for the South Regional in the State Tournament as Zone 10 has sent four teams and Zone 9 adds three.

"I think that they over reacted," said Hingham coach Vin Murray, who is one of the deans of coaches in Zone 10. "The Zone 10 Playoffs to get teams into the state is exciting and the district playoffs are even more exciting. When we beat New Bedford to get the to State Tournament, we had about five or six hundred at the game. It was an exciting experience. There are ways around it. I don't go along with them."

"I don't agree with it," said Merrigan, who is retiring at the end of the season. "There is the chance that if a small team like us finishes fifth and pulls the upset it is taken away."

cracking and groans across the lake over the quite outstanding homemade fireworks.

Still, I wasn't giving up.

There was still some water skiing to do.

I have been water skiing since I was 8 or 9 years old, maybe even younger.

In college at The University of Miami, I was on the water ski team.

We were pretty good and back then I could easily handle one ski, jumping and trick skis.

The last few years I have slowed a bit though, scaling back to skiing on two skis to keep from hurting myself.

This time around, I had a feeling something was off when I was winded just putting the skis on.

Then I tried my patented dock start, and went face first into the drink.

That led to trying to get the skis back on in the water, and my once flexible self realized age has caught up.

I had to swim in and get the skis back on my feet on dry land.

No problem. Now I was determined.

This time, I hit the water and popped right up.

Then again, realizing I am no longer 22 and invincible, I waved goodbye about halfway around the lake when I felt dual twinges in my abs and my back.

That got me thinking about guys like Brett Favre, who I have heard might make a comeback again, and Mark Recchi retiring.

That guy was amazing. I can't fathom someone close to my age playing in the NHL and having the kind of success he did.

Same goes for Tim Wakefield.

Speaking of the Bruins, here's a quick thanks to the MIAA schedule makers for giving us the Div. 4 baseball championship game on the same night as Game 7 of the Stanley Cup Finals.

If it weren't the Bruins playing, I wouldn't have a gripe, and I'm sure there was a legitimate reason the game had to be played that night, but it was the Bruins and it just seemed like they could have played earlier or postponed one night.

At least I made it home for the final six seconds of the game and the celebration, which was pretty sweet.

I also have to admit, I was happy to be with the Skippers as they made history with a great win.

This was a good group of quality kids and a fantastic coaching staff who deserved all the accolades.

I have also been reminded of my getting older lately as my family and I have been watching reruns of Ninja Warrior on G4 almost nonstop lately.

If you want to see real, dedicated athletes, watch this show.

These are some of the great athletes ever facing one of the most impossible obstacle courses ever designed.

In fact, my new favorite athlete is Makoto Nagano, a fishing boat captain who might be the greatest athlete ever.

This is the kind of athlete I would love to have on my team any time.

Watch the show and you'll understand.

Ninja Warrior rules.

They actually have an online game that I've tried, but it just makes it more frustrating that I haven't figured out how to get through the log roll.

It reminds me of trying to beat Mike Tyson in the Mike Tyson Knockout Boxing for Nintendo.

It just doesn't come easily.

Fortunately, there's still Penny Can.

That's a game I can handle.

CONSERVATORY NOTES

Nicholas Palmer conducting. COURTESY PHOTO

Conducting the Orchestra

DAVE BRYAN

For almost as long as I can remember I've thought it would be fantastic to conduct a symphony orchestra. Well, that and to play guitar with the E Street Band. So last January at South Shore Conservatory's Chase Away the Winter Blues event, when I saw that conducting the Evenings Under the Stars (EUS) orchestra this summer was a silent auction item, I knew that now was my opportunity, and I'd better take a chance.

All evening I kept sneaking back to the bid sheet, upping my bid as necessary to make sure that I still had the highest bid. I was taking no chances. When the bidding was over I was very thrilled to discover I had won. So, on Saturday night, July 9, my long-time fantasy comes true as I conduct the EUS orchestra in John Philip Sousa's "Washington Post March" at the Evenings Under the Stars Pops concert. My dream will finally become reality.

This concert is the first in the series of EUS Saturday night concerts presented by South Shore Conservatory every summer. The Jane Carr Amphitheater at the Conservatory's Hingham location provides a relaxing and festival atmosphere for listening to all types of music. The EUS Pops concert is being conducted by Hingham's Nicholas Palmer, who has conducted the orchestra since EUS started 15 years ago. He is soon to be my mentor.

Surprisingly, I'm not very nervous about conducting – yet. After all, I have conducted pieces ranging from Mozart to Mahler to Stravinsky many times in the past, and my stereo has always followed my direction perfectly. It helps that part of the "conducting package" is for a short conducting lesson with Nicholas on how to conduct an orchestra. With his expertise, a baton, and my good white sports coat, what could possibly go wrong?

Also on this concert program is a reprise of Conservatory composer John Kramer's "Music Is...." composition, which made its world premiere in November to celebrate SSC's 40th anniversary. This amazing piece features not only the EUS Festival Orchestra, but also SSC faculty and students, soloists, chorus and rock band. I'm glad I'm not conducting that piece.

Other familiar pieces include Copland's "Hoe Down," William's "Imperial March" from "Star Wars," Ricket's arrangement of "Pirates of the Caribbean Suite," and selections from "The Sound of Music." The orchestra concludes with Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture" featuring the EUS security force on backstage shotgun.

I invite you to join me on July 9 for my conducting debut. (I wonder if my fellow bidders will join me as well?) These concerts are so good, so convenient and so much fun that everyone should sample at least one – or maybe grab tickets for the whole season.

Next year? Maybe we can get the Boss and his band to visit. I'll be ready. After all, I've played with them before.

For tickets to all Evenings Under the Stars concerts, please visit www.sscmusic.org.

Hingham resident David Bryan has been a Conservatory trustee since 1992. He has also served as chief executive officer of Avedis Zildjian Co. and vice president of Sara Lee Corp. He tried a stint as an amateur drummer, but gave it up to become a conductor.

ATLANTIC OVERTURES

The best way to turn 15 – with a party!

Expect the unexpected, as the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra prepares to enter its 15th season – and fifth under the ASO name – with a Friday evening, July 15, party that orchestra supporters are calling "Music in the Park."

First of all, the "park" is indoors: the sprawling Bergsten Music warehouse space in Hingham, being made over into a charmingly funky and fun environment for dancing, noshing and sipping delicious wines. You'll find the surprisingly inviting environs at 85 Research Road, just off Derby St. near Route 3's Exit 15.

Then, supporters of the South Shore's premier professional orchestra are planning festivities that feature music ranging far beyond the classical.

Classical playing will be much in evidence, sure. That's the ASO's forte, after all. But members of the popular band Border Road – denizens of some of the South Shore's top clubs — will also be on hand, drawing the audience onto a dance floor specially prepared for the occasion. And ASO principal flutist Jessica Lizak will team up with piano soloist Konstantinos Papadakis to delight with Pops-style fare, as well.

ROY HARRIS

If you know Jessica for her lovely solos from the woodwind section of the ASO, you'll be delighted with the warm, personal style she displays on her own or in a duet. And Konstantinos plays with mastery whenever he touches the keyboard.

As a special treat, Jessica and Konstantinos will join with the Border Road guys to perform some pieces from the enchanting suites of Claude Bolling.

The party will help set the stage for another fantastic ASO year under the baton of Maestro Jin Kim, also in his 15th season with the orchestra formerly known as the Hingham Symphony. Once again, the ASO will be bringing classical music and pops performances to fine South Shore concert halls from Braintree to Duxbury, with a range of smaller programs in-between. Plans for the season's offerings are in the works right now.

But first, we take time to celebrate – and raise funds for the coming year. A donation of $50 per person gains you entry into "Music in the Park." The doors open at 7 p.m. Once inside, you'll also have the opportunity to bid on dozens of auction items assembled by ASO supporters just for this occasion.

If funky-to-formal summarizes the theme for the music, it's also a good description for the auction. Some of the items defy description – as the word "funky" would suggest – but some of the more "conservative" offerings include Red Sox tickets, sailboat cruises, horseback riding lessons, weekend use of vacation homes, and dinner with none other that Maestro Jin Kim himself.

New auction items are pouring in, even as you read this.

What a wonderful way to get ready for the 2011-2012 season of Atlantic Symphony Orchestra music. Look for the announcement of the schedule's offerings soon. We can hardly wait for August!

For more information, visit www.atlanticsymphony.org, or call 781-740-331-3600.

Hingham resident Roy Harris, a co-president of the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra board of directors, is a veteran business journalist and author who edits the www.cfoworld.com website for IDG Enterprise, based in Framingham.

For 'Music in the Park,' the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra's Friday, July 15, fundraiser, the indoor 'park' of Bergsten Music's warehouse, 85 Research Road, Hingham, will be transformed into a party land. The program features a blend of musical treats, wine and yummy eats, along with dancing and auction fun.

Horoscope

SALOME'S STARS FOR RELEASE WEEK OF JULY 18, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) You're not Sheepish when it comes to asserting your opinions on what you think is right or wrong. Be assured that you're being heard, and something positive will follow.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Your sense of justice makes it difficult not to speak up about a recurring matter involving a co-worker. But, once again, you need facts to back you up before you can act.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Romance is still dominant, and if Cupid misfired before, don't worry. He'll take better aim at someone new this time around. Expect favorable news about a financial matter.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) The zodiac's Moon Children can expect things to work out pretty much as planned. One negative note involves a minor relationship problem that suddenly turns serious.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) You're suddenly being asked to make choices between two practically equal offers. Which one to choose? Easy. The one most likely to gladden your Lion's heart.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Once again, you're confronted by a workplace problem you thought you'd already resolved. This time, you might need to go higher up to find a just resolution.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Good for you: You're determined to stick with your goals and ignore those naysayers who might try to discourage you. You're on the right track. The challenge now is to stay on it.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) You'll soon get news that is supposed to help you with a troublesome situation. Use your sharp Scorpion instincts to determine if the information is reliable.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) If you learn someone has betrayed your trust, don't just accept it and walk away. You need to know why that person decided to do what he or she did.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) A painful family relationship problem could finally begin to heal. Be prepared to show more flexibility than you might like. But it could be worth it.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) It's a good idea to enhance your career skills so you'll be prepared to accept a more responsible position when it's offered. A friend returns a favor just when you need it.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Show that strong, steely backbone that you usually hide, and demand to be included in any family decision-making that could affect the well-being of a loved one.

BORN THIS WEEK: You can be happy being alone at home. But you also love exploring the world outside and meeting new people and sharing new ideas.

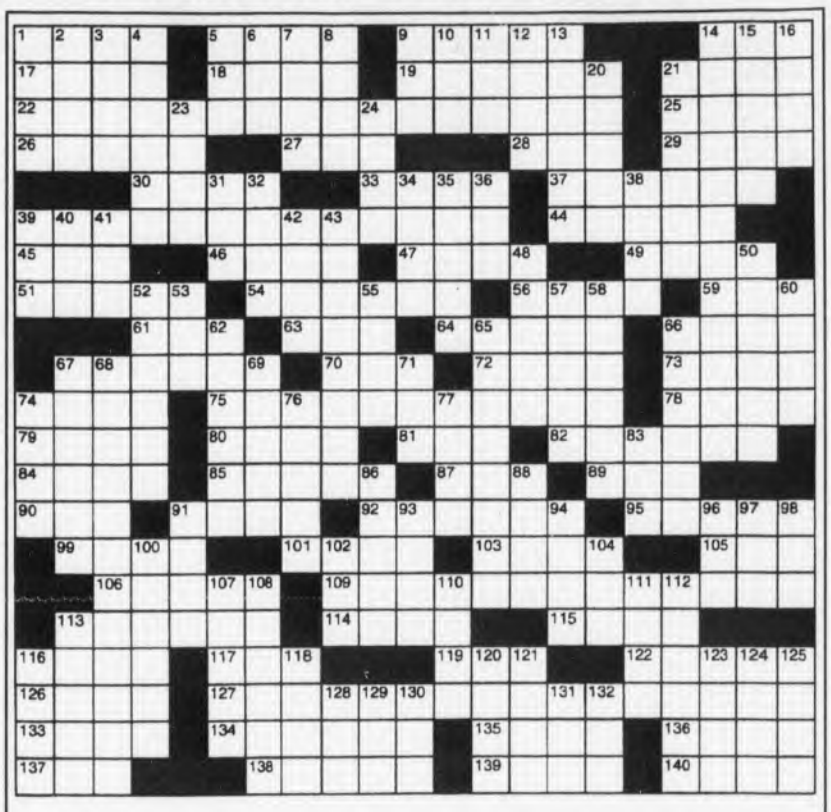
Fun By The Numbers



Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Level: Hoo Boy!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

SUMMERTIME SCENE

Carillon recitals every Sunday

The Cohasset Carillon is the largest carillon by number of bells (57) in New England and can also claim the oldest continuing annual recital series in North America. In 1925, one year after the installation of the first set of bells (23), President Calvin Coolidge and his wife Grace stood on Cohasset Common, listening to Kamiel Lefevere play a program of popular songs, including "Annie Laurie."

The 87th annual Summer Recital Series begins Sunday July 3 at 6 p.m. and will continue each Sunday until August 14.

- July 10: Gijsbert Kok (the Netherlands)
- July 17: Monika Kazmierczak (Poland)
- July 24: Mary Kennedy (Cohasset)
- July 31: Gordon Slater (Canada)
- Aug 7: Lee Cobb (Lake Wales, Fla.)
- Aug 14: Jonathan Lehrer (Cambridge, Mass.)

Cohasset Common, in the center of town, is one of the best listening places. Parking is ample and free. Bring your lawn chairs or a blanket along with a picnic supper to enjoy on the Common while the bells are ringing. After each recital, a brief tour of the tower is offered for those interested in seeing the instrument in the playing cabinet and the bells in the tower above.

CAMP JOBS & INTERNSHIPS: A WORLD OF OPPORTUNITY
By Bette Bussel, Executive Director American Camp Association, New England

Since camps ARE worlds created exclusively for children, folks working at camp typically enjoy spending time with children, but not every camp employee works directly with children on a daily basis. There are some camp jobs and internships that involve the care and keeping of the camp and its equipment rather than that of the campers!

The American Camp Association, New England has compiled a list of essential and lesser known jobs that are required at camps across New England.

The General counselor -couselors, which is the most common job, work directly with children-teaching, role-modeling, listening, problem-solving, chaperoning, entertaining, supervising, and helping in various ways.

The Shopper - a chief provisioning role in camp requiring numerous trips to various stores, to the Post Office and to perform errands.

The Driver - (may require special license) – drop off and pick up those campers or hikers on out of camp trips, run camp errands, take a camp team to compete at a neighboring camp, drives campers to doctor/dentist visits, or picks up and drops off staff and campers at the airport or bus station.

The Kitchen Staff - can be perform highly specialized tasks (pot scrubber or dishwasher) or general ones (assistants can do everything from chopping veggies for the salad bar, receiving deliveries or serving up food).

The Maintenance/ Ground Jobs - mow fields, deliver camper gear on opening and closing day, do odd jobs involving basic carpentry and/or brute strength, perform maintenance for camp vehicles and other equipment, like boats, and keep camp looking neat.

The Office-Based Staff - deal with the ever-growing mounds of camper mail and email, keep up with registration and health forms and parent requests, and offer a friendly voice on the telephone.

The Lifeguard - uses that Red Cross credential to keep campers safe in the lake or pool.

In Animal Care - horses, small farm animals - llamas even - are an important part of camp programming and camp life; animals require attention and care during the hot summer months.

Check out positions like these as well as other camp jobs on ACA, New England's website (click on "camp professionals" and then "jobs").

SELECTMEN

Shake up on the Con Com

Selectmen replace three current members, appoint newcomers

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

A typically routine item on the Board of Selectmen's annual list of reappointing various committees ended up being not-so-routine for one town committee.

On Tuesday night, in an unusual move, selectmen unseated three current Conservation Commission members in favor of three newcomers.

Although willing to serve another three-year term, Conservation Commission members Debbie Cook, Sarah Charron and Dick Karoff were not reappointed to the board. Instead, Alexander Koines of Atlantic Avenue, Jim Marten of Nichols Road and James Gilman of Rust Way were appointed as full members of the committee.

On Monday, seven letters expressing interest in being appointed to the Conservation Commission arrived at the selectmen's office. Six of them were hand-delivered as one package.

The sudden interest in the Conservation Commission is surprising, Chairman David Farrag said, because for roughly two years there have been two open associate member (non-voting) seats available on the board. Farrag said it has been past practice for citizens to serve for about a year as an associate member in order to learn the technicalities of the position before becoming a full voting member.

"To get seven letters (Monday) unsolicited is quite unique," Farrag said.

The shake up on the Conservation Commission comes after the commission recently closed the public hearing process on a Notice of Intent (NOI) application from the town on

A new way to snack

Vendor brings 'mindful' treats to Farmers Market

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

Lara Amaral is on a mission to change the way people think about what they put in their bodies.

On the heels of a life-changing illness last year, Amaral decided to leave behind her career in finance to embrace her life's passion: health and wellness.

Amaral, a Scituate resident, has started a business, in part, devoted to crafting treats that are both nourishing and energizing. Authentically You! Power Snacks are currently being sold at the Cohasset and Marshfield farmers markets and Front Street Gourmet in Scituate.

Her passion for the snacks, and even more so what they represent, is evident the moment she opens her mouth.

"I'm doing this from a place in my heart and I'm loving it," said Amaral, 42.

This business has always been in the back of Amaral's mind. She's been crafting these snacks for her own consumption for more than two decades. When her friends tasted them they told her she really had something and encouraged her to think about starting a business.

"I always let my limiting beliefs stand in my way," Amaral said. A full-time job in the finance industry kept her busy.

OSGOOD SCHOOL

New principal gets to work

Sharon Bellao began job Monday

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

It may have taken several months, but a new principal for the Joseph Osgood School has been found.

Sharon Bellao started her position as Osgood principal on Monday. She most recently held the position of principal at Forestdale School, which serves kindergarten through eighth grade in East Sandwich, Mass.

"I'm very excited to be here. There is a wonderful team of teachers and staff," Bellao said in a phone interview on Tuesday. "The minute I met the teachers I could see they are supportive of each other and they are collaborative and that's the type of team I want to work with."

The fact that Osgood serves the youngest of students, pre-K through second grade, was part of the attraction to the position for Bellao. She was a first grade teacher for 14 years in Sharon.

"It was always my dream to teach first grade...it's magical to see kids reading for the first time," Bellao said.

In her position in Sandwich, where she had spent the last three years, she developed an extensive reading and literacy program.

Before her time in Sandwich she served as principal at Woodsdale Elementary in Abington.

Janet Sheehan, who served as Osgood principal for the past decade,

BY THE NUMBERS BY DAVID RILEY / SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

How much aid will Cohasset receive?

$2,111,022

WHAT THIS NUMBER MEANS:
It shows the estimated total state aid your municipality would receive under the new state budget that Gov. Deval Patrick signed on Monday, July 11. The budget will cover the fiscal year extending from this month until June 30, 2012. This estimate includes the main sources of state funding for municipalities, including Chapter 70 aid for public schools and unrestricted general government aid.

UP OR DOWN FROM LAST YEAR?
Down $25,183

CONTEXT:
This number also does not reflect the loss of roughly $221 million in federal stimulus funding for the state's public schools this fiscal year, according to the Massachusetts Municipal Association. However, the budget also includes a provision that would send state funds left unspent at the end of fiscal 2011 to town and city governments. This is meant to make up for cuts to local aid, but it's premature to say how much this measure could yield for towns and cities, Mass. Municipal Association Executive Director Geoff Beckwith said. Towns and cities will not likely know until fall how much this might yield for local coffers. (In Fiscal 2011, Cohasset received $2,136,205 in state aid.)

Nancy White

The Mariner caught up with its reporter, Nancy White, on her final day working from the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square. Nancy begins as editor of the Marshfield and Scituate Mariners next week. Her thoughts on the past four and a half years are on page 12. STAFF PHOTO BY ROBIN CHAN

Name: Nancy White

Occupation: Cohasset Mariner reporter and soon to be editor of the Marshfield and Scituate Mariners.

Best day of your life: The day I brought home my dog, Duncan!

Best vacation: Spring Break in London in 2004.

Favorite season: Spring and Summer (I can't choose!)

Favorite meal: Turkey burger with sweet potato fries from Stars in Hingham.

Best book: "The Story of Edgar Sawtelle" by David Wroblewski. I'm a sucker for books about dogs.

Best actors: Matt Damon and Tom Hanks.

Best TV show: "The Closer" – I love Brenda!

Favorite music artist: Keith Urban! And most country music. There is something pure and refreshing about it, especially when compared to today's pop/rap music.

Most embarrassing moment: Several years ago I was interviewing someone on the phone. We were talking about a big decision she had recently made. She told me (or so I thought) she spoke to her mother about the decision on her cell phone while out walking. A few minutes later she saw a rainbow and knew she had made the right decision.

Of course, I put this touching piece of information in the story. A few weeks later I found out (from someone else) the interviewee's mother had passed away years ago and couldn't have possibly been reached by cell phone! I was so embarrassed – just goes to show every detail makes a difference.

Pet peeve: When someone calls me on the phone, talks to me for 20 minutes about an issue, then says: "this is all off the record, right?"

Goal: To be the best community journalist I can be.

Person you'd most like to meet: Jane Austen.

Biggest worry: Having time to do everything I want to do.

Best part of Cohasset: The Cohasset Mariner and the people in the community who help make it the rich community newspaper it is.

POLICE BEAT

Marked cruiser collides with Jeep

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

A marked police cruiser responding to a priority 1 call on Nichols Road collided with a Jeep Wrangler at the intersection of Forest Ave. and North Main St. on Saturday (July 9) around 5 p.m.

The cruiser was heading south on North Main Street with its blue lights flashing as it approached the intersection. The officer driving the cruiser attempted to pass three cars waiting at the lights. Police said the Jeep turned left in front of the cruiser as it attempted to pass. The cruiser struck the front of the Jeep, operated by a 45-year-old woman from Cohasset, and careened off the road. The cruiser's front tire fell off and the fender was pushed in. Both cars were brought to nearby Robbin's garage.

No injuries were reported. It turned out the Jeep was not registered and police issued the driver a citation.

Lieutenant William Quigley said he expected the 2008 Ford Crown Victoria to be out of service for about a week.

Fireworks

Every Fourth of July (and the week leading up to the holiday) Cohasset Police are inundated with calls about fireworks. In Massachusetts it is illegal to possess fireworks and light them off.

Lt. Quigley said there is a trend toward more commercial grade fireworks making their way into lay people's hands. He said these commercial grade fireworks have more gunpowder and are more dangerous.

"We're really concerned about commercial grade fireworks because they have real potential for people to lose their life," Quigley said.

Multiple calls came in regarding fireworks over the holiday weekend, but Cohasset Police did not confiscate any fireworks.

Unlicensed

An officer on patrol on July 4 clocked a 2009 Toyota Tundra going 52 miles per hour in a 35 miles per hour zone on Route 3A near Shaw's Plaza around 9:45 p.m. The officer stopped the vehicle near the intersection of 3A and Beechwood Street.

Through a registry check it was found the driver of the car, a 40-year-old Norwell man, had an expired license and the vehicle was unregistered.

The man received a summons to court for operating a vehicle with an expired license, operating an unregistered motor vehicle and speeding. The truck was towed and the man was given a ride to the Hingham Shipyard.

Grinder

The assistant harbormaster called police regarding three suspicious males near the Cohasset Yacht Club around 12:30 a.m. on Tuesday (July 5). When officers arrived they found three 19-year-old men from Cohasset who had just come off a boat. One of the males had a grinder, a device commonly used to pulverize large pieces of marijuana so it can be smoked, Quigley said. The grinder was seized and destroyed. The men did not have any drugs on them and were sent on their way.

Sand bar

A 32-foot sailboat was stuck on a sandbar off Sandy Beach around 7:20 p.m. on Tuesday (July 5). A resident of Sheldon Road called in to police after noticing the boat. Police called Harbormaster Lorri Gibbons who told them the boat would have to wait about three hours for the tide to come in. The boat eventually was lifted off the sand bar and continued on its way.

Bike accident

Two women riding their bikes on Wednesday (July 6) did not heed the warning signs about the train tracks on North Main Street near the Cohasset Station. Both women's front tires got stuck in the tracks and were thrown off their bicycles.

Paramedics arrived on the scene to treat the women, but both women, a 43-year-old from Pembroke and a 45-year-old from Chelsea, refused transport to the hospital. Both women had minor scrapes and cuts and their helmets got cracked due to the impact. The bicyclists called for a ride to take them home.

Possible OUI

A resident of Gammons Road called in a possible drunk driver who backed into a telephone pole on his street on Wednesday around 6:30 p.m. The caller reported a green Toyota Tundra pickup truck came down Gammons Road (a dead end), turned around, and hit a telephone pole in the process. The resident spoke briefly with the driver of the car when he noticed a strong odor of alcohol.

The truck left and then the resident called the police.

The police issued a BOLO (be on the look out) for the car, but it was not found. No damage was done to the telephone pole.

Walk-in

On Thursday (July 7) a walk-in to the police station was looking for help because her dog had something lodged in his throat. Officers could see something was in the dog's throat, but the animal was still breathing. The officers advised the dog's owner to make a trip to the Hingham Animal Clinic.

Property damage

A 66-year-old male on Jerusalem Road reported his newspaper deliveryman caused property damage in his driveway. The deliveryman, an 83-year-old from Scituate, was driving a 2002 Suburu when police said he backed into railroad ties on the property knocking them over. Police took a report, located the driver and provided the Jerusalem Road resident with the necessary insurance information.

Argument

A concerned caller reported a couple arguing loudly in a red Toyota Corolla in the Shaw's parking lot on Thursday (July 7). Cohasset police caught up with the car near the Scituate border on Route 3A. A 27-year-old Scituate man was operating the car and a 25-year-old woman was in the passenger seat. After speaking with the couple, and confirming there was no physical abuse, the couple was sent on their way.

Disabled cruiser

A marked cruiser being driven by a police sergeant became disabled in the middle of the intersection of Ripley Road and Sohier Street around 8:40 a.m. on Friday (July 8). The cruiser, a 2005 Ford Crown Victoria with about 168,000 miles on it, was towed to the repair shop. The battery and alternator shorted out and was replaced, Quigley said. The car was out of service over the weekend.

Stolen jewelry

A former Cohasset resident who re-located to New Jersey in May reported she was missing about $20,000 in jewelry. She had finished packing and the jewelry did not turn up. The 45-year-old woman is compiling a list of the missing jewelry to give to Cohasset detectives. Police said the missing jewelry included a gold Rolex watch, wedding bands and other gold and pearl items.

Gas station

Police received a phone call from the village gas station around noon on Sunday (July 10) reporting a green or gray Saab had caused property damage. Apparently, the Saab, operated by a 44-year-old Plymouth man, drove off with the gas hose attached to his car.

An officer on patrol saw a car matching the description parked on Summer Street. The officer knocked on the door of the home and found a man matching the description given by the gas station attendant. According to police, the man admitted he left the gas station after realizing he could not afford the gas.

The driver has been summonsed to court on charges of leaving the scene of a motor vehicle accident after causing property damage.

Police charge man with stealing Porsche

Cohasset Police detectives, assisted by Boston Police, arrested Michael R. Dorion, 19, 64 G St., Apt. 2, South Boston, on July 7, 2011, based on a criminal complaint and arrest warrant issued from Quincy District Court. The criminal complaint alleges that on May 8, 2011, Dorion and an accomplice stole a motor vehicle – a 2010 Porsche Paname – from a Cohasset resident and then unlawfully used the victim's credit cards. The complaint also alleges that Dorion conspired with another individual in committing these crimes. After the arrest, Dorion was transported to Cohasset Police headquarters where he was fingerprinted and photographed. He has been ordered held on $25,000 cash bail.

Michael R. Dorion

Cohasset Police have charged the accomplice by means of a criminal complaint with the same offenses. He is scheduled to be arraigned at a later date in Quincy District Court.

Chief Mark DeLuca said that "Our detectives did an excellent job solving this case. They gathered a massive amount of evidence to support this complaint – it was really the quality investigative job that I have come to expect from them."

BEAR HILL

Antenna for regional dispatch will go ahead

Regardless of the changes happening with the Bear Hill cell antenna project improvements to public safety radio equipment is still going forward.

As part of improvements for the regional dispatch center, a backup transmitter and receiver to enhance radio communications was to be installed on Bear Hill. Fire Chief Robert Silvia had planned to install the equipment coinciding with the cell antenna installation on the Bear Hill water tank.

Last week, Water Commission chairman Peter DeCaprio said AT&T, who had a contract with the town to install cell antenna equipment on the Bear Hill water tank, was re-evaluating the project in light of its recent acquisition of T-Mobile.

The water commission is currently negotiating with Verizon, but it's unlikely the project would happen in time for the new regional dispatch center's opening in September.

"We had hoped to piggy back (on the AT&T project) because it would have decreased the cost, but we are still going ahead (with the equipment installation on Bear Hill)," Silvia said.

The new equipment will improve radio communications all over town, but especially address two patchy spots found in a propagation study done a few years ago. Two of the blind spots were near the high school and on the Jerusalem Road (near West Corner). In addition to the Bear Hill radio equipment, a receiver site is being installed on Hull Town Hall.

On Bear Hill a small antenna two feet in diameter will be installed at the lip of the water tank as well as a small associated cabinet. If and when the cell company installs its equipment, the cabinet will be moved inside that structure.

"This is just a little bump in the road but we're going to make it happen and do what we have to do," Silvia said.

The new antennas are being paid for out of the state 9-1-1 grant associated with the new regional call center. Hull and Norwell are getting radio communications upgrades as well. The total cost of the upgrades to Cohasset radio equipment is $160,000, Silvia said.

BRIEFLY

Aquarion calls for voluntary water conservation

Aquarion Water Company is asking customers in North Cohasset to voluntarily reduce their water consumption. Since Memorial Day weekend the Company has experienced high water demands during the hot and dry periods. The higher demands are due primarily to watering of lawns through irrigation systems.

The company is requesting all customers with irrigation systems, both permanent and temporary, to use water wisely. This means limiting the use of an irrigation system to no more than two days per week, before 6 a.m. and after 6 p.m., and ensuring the system is operating properly.

In the event the water demand is not reduced immediately through voluntary measures, the Company will be forced to reduce the water demand through mandatory water restrictions. The water restrictions imposed in 2010 banned the use of sprinklers and irrigation systems, and only allowed watering and outdoor water use on an odd/even basis between 6 and 9 p.m. using hand-held watering devices only.

Aquarion Water Company of Massachusetts, an Aquarion subsidiary, is the public water supply company for some 18,500 homes and businesses. For information and conservation tips call the 800-928-3734, or visit www.aquarionwater.com.

COHASSET DRAMATIC CLUB

'Honk, Jr.' and 'Godspell' on stage

Henrietta, played by Morgan Fechter of Cohasset, Maureen, played by Rebecca Fredey of Cohasset, Maggie Pie played by Maggie Seebeck of Cohasset, and Grace played by Olivia Arnold of Cohasset gather around Ida played by Sophie McLellan of Rockland, center at a dress rehearsal this week. WHO:
Each summer more than 100 kids participate in the Cohasset Dramatic Club's Summer Drama workshop. The talent comes from all over the South Shore.

WHAT:
This year, the summer drama workshop is putting on two shows. Seventy-two kids, ages 8 through 13, are part of the production of "Honk, Jr.," the re-telling of the Hans Christian Anderson story, "The Ugly Duckling." Sixteen kids, ages 13 to 19, will perform the well-known Broadway musical "Godspell."

ABOUT "HONK, JR.":
The story opens by introducing an odd-looking duck named Ugly and his quest to find his mother. Through his adventures, Ugly runs into an alluring cat who wants to eat him for lunch, a Bullfrog with the catchiest "pep-talk" around, and a swan named Penny who, after being tangled in some fishing line, becomes Ugly's first like-minded friend. As winter turns to spring, Ugly's journey brings him back home having discovered friendship, a sense of self and a realization that being different doesn't mean being left out.

ABOUT "GODSPELL":
This young, but seasoned, cast of "Godspell" has taken the rock musical of the 70s and made it their own, all while keeping the same irreverence, high-spirited fun the show is known for. "Godspell" is a musical based on the Gospel according to St. Matthew with catchy, unforgettable music. It brings to the stage a timeless message: finding your quiet, unshakable faith amid a very loud, modern world. The cast has put their own stamp on the play, including timely pop culture references, as they bring a modern, customized twist to playing out the parables, but the result of seeing "Godspell" remains the same.

EXTRA IN YOUR MARINER

WHEN:
"Honk, Jr." debuts at 10 a.m. Friday (today, July 15) and reprises the performance at 7 p.m., Saturday, July 16 at 7 p.m. and 2 p.m. on Sunday, July 17. "Godspell" performances are Friday, July 22 at 2 p.m. and 7:30 p.m., Saturday, July 23 at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday, July 24 at 2 p.m. All performances are at the Cohasset Town Hall auditorium, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset.

All beaches open for swimming

Each week the water off Cohasset's coast is sampled on Tuesday to ensure it is clean and safe for swimming. The water samples are tested for enterococci and the results come back on Wednesday afternoon. This week, the beaches had nearly perfect results. The max level for safe swimming is 104 colonies of enterococci per 100 milliliters of water, or a geometric mean over the last five weeks of over 35.

The beach sampling results for Cohasset beaches (and beaches across the state) are posted every on the Department of Public Health's website (www.mass.gov/dph). Testing results for all sampling stations are available on the Department of Public Health website dating back to the summer of 2002.

This week's results

Results indicate the number of colonies of enterococci per 100 milliliters (cfu/100mL).

GIMME SHELTER

Stan and Ollie are male British shorthairs who thrive on companionship.

Stan and Ollie are quite a pair

This week, Hull Seaside Animal Rescue hopes to find shelter for Stan and Ollie. They are male British shorthairs. Stan and Ollie are young adult purebred cats. They are good-natured and love lots of attention.

They were surrendered by a person who originally had been home during the day, but circumstances changed and she could no longer give them the attention they needed. The shelter is looking for a home for them where the people are home most of the day. They are extremely sociable cats, and though they don't require constant attention, they do require companionship and thrive when they have it.

If interested, you can visit Stan and Ollie and our dozens of cats and kittens at the shelter. You can also check Stan and Ollie out on the website along with many of HSAR's other cats at hsar.org. HSAR has open hours on Saturday from 2 to 3 p.m. and Monday from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. If these hours aren't convenient, please call the shelter at 781-925-3121 and leave a message for Judy, the adoption coordinator.

The shelter is located at 50 L St., Hull. The mailing address is Hull Seaside Animal Rescue, PO Box 787, Hull, MA 02045. The email address is hsar@verizon.net.

HSAR is always looking for volunteers. If you have a couple of hours a week to spare, please call Nancy at 782-925-3638. You'll be glad you did.

Thanks to the many people who generously donate to the HSAR cause. They couldn't do it without you.

AROUND TOWN

Farmers market and stage performances

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Hey Cohasset, how is everyone doing? The weather has been so nice lately and I look forward to more to come. Make sure to get out and about if you can and go to some of the local Farmers Markets: Hingham on Saturdays, North Scituate on Wednesdays and Thursdays is Cohasset's own on the Common. It's a wonderful way to enjoy friends, family and our local businesses as well as get some yummy, tasty fruits and vegetables for all. I would like to encourage and remind all of us as we are out at the beaches, walks, town commons and playgrounds to take a look around and clean up any of the trash that you and your group have created or, in a bigger sense, try to clean up your mess and the mess that was left behind by others. If we all work together, we will have a prettier, cleaner town to enjoy.

Thayer Academy

A Cohasset student, Charlie Steele, a freshman at Thayer Academy won two academic awards this year. Charlie won the award for academic achievement for Mathamatics as well as highest academic achievement award for Spanish. Charlie, your family and friends are very proud of you and hope that you give yourself a well-deserved pat on the back. Nice work!

Ballet

Cohasset's Maggie Seebeck (13) recently completed the Bossov Ballet Theatre's Vaganova ballet intensive in Pittsfield, Maine under the direction of Andrei Bossov. Mr. Bossov came to the United States following a 20-year career with the Kirov Ballet, St. Petersburg, Russia, as a principal dancer and choreographer. For twelve of his twenty years he also served as an instructor at the Vaganova Academy in St. Petersburg. Bossov Ballet Theatre was founded in 1996 on the campus of Maine Central Institute.

Marcia Coe, right, who lives in Wheelwright Farm, recently traveled to Northern California in June to see her grandson, Kevin Connolly, graduate from the University of California at Davis. Kevin was born in Cohasset, but his family moved to Duxbury when he was two, then to California in 1997. Kevin's mother, Mary Coe Connolly, left, is a 1977 Cohasset High grad.

Flight training

Cohasset native 1st Lt. Andrew Paul Musto is a 2008 graduate of Virginia Tech, where he received a bachelor of arts degree in political science. During Advanced Jet Flight Training he earned three Navy "Es" for bombing accuracy. He qualified in the T-45C onboard the USS George H.W. Bush (CVN-77) on April 2, 2011. He completed Advanced Jet Flight Training with Training Squadron NINE.

He will be flying a Harrier jet, and he and his wife, Stephanie, will be stationed at MCAS Cherry Point in North Carolina. Congratulations, Andrew.

Honk, Jr.

For any of you who are looking for something to do this weekend with your families and friends, have I got something to tell you about! The Cohasset Dramatic Club's (CDC) Summer Drama Workshop program is the heart-warming musical, "Honk! Jr.," the retelling of the classic Hans Christian Anderson story, "The Ugly Duckling" with music by George Stiles and book and lyrics by Anthony Drewe. This delightful show features a cast of 72 children, ages 8 to 13 representing towns across the South Shore.

"Honk, Jr." is directed and choreographed by Lisa Pratt of Cohasset, and music directed by Mark Bono of Milton. The rest of the production team is rounded out with Stage Manager Bill Stiles of Easton, and seven teen production interns John Demick (Cohasset), Alex Huntington (Scituate), Andrew Lemieux (Scituate), Faith Porter (Cohasset), Logan Pratt (Cohasset), Molly Rafferty (Scituate) and Julia Thompson (Cohasset).

"Honk, Jr." is presented by Cohasset Dramatic Club in cooperation with the Cohasset Recreation Department, performs Friday, July 15 at 10a.m. and 7p.m., Saturday, July 16 at 7p.m., and Sunday, July 17 at 2p.m. at the Town Hall.

Godspell

Following the smash run of Cohasset Dramatic Club's (CDC) Summer Drama Workshop program for kids, "Honk, Jr," the teens take the stage in the joyous Broadway musical, "Godspell," running July 22-24 at the historic Town Hall Theater on Cohasset Common. This beloved show features a multi-talented cast of actors ages 13-19 who have appeared onstage throughout the Boston area, and hail from across the South Shore. The story, as you have probably heard or seen is John Michael Tebelak's catchy and love-filled interpretation of the gospel according to St. Matthew, adorned by the music of Stephen Schwartz ("Pippin," "Wicked").

This cast has taken "Godspell," the rock musical of the 70's and made it their own with all the irreverence, and cheerful, high-spirited fun the show exuded upon it's opening over 30 years ago. The young Cohasset actors and actresses include, Michael Baldry, Meghan Considine, Madison Hindley, Faith Porter, Logan Pratt, Madison Pratt and Julia Thompson.

"Godspell," presented by Cohasset Dramatic Club in cooperation with the Cohasset Recreation Department, performs Friday, July 22 at 2p.m. and 7:30 p.m., Saturday, July 23 at 7:30 p.m., and Sunday, July 24 at 2p.m. at the Town Hall.

Gerbils

Here is a question for any of our readers. Charlotte Malone, a Cohasset resident and pre-veterinary major at UMass Amherst has several "adorable" baby gerbils ready for adoption - and guess what? They are free! ABC BOOKS

Hunting letters and knowledge

By Sara Hollingshead
shollingshead@wickedlocal.com

Gael Daly's interest in the alphabet began as a reading specialist in Natick; since then, she has published four ABC Books.

As a summer resident of Scituate, Daly began seeing letters all over the town; After working in Natick as an elementary reading specialist for more than 35 years, Daly had seen and worked with numerous ABC Books and was intrigued with the different forms and shapes a letter can take. After finding letters in different places and shapes, all over town Daly decided to create an ABC Book, but with a twist.

In 2008, Daly published "Scituate From A to Z," followed by "Hingham From A to Z" and "Miami Lakes From A to Z" in 2009 and "Cohasset from A to Z" in 2010. Daly is currently working on "Natick From A to Z."

These books provide readers with letters hidden inside of pictures of nature and architecture taken from their respective town. Daly explains that she does not go out and create these letters but rather, "finds what I find." Pictures include the letter 'Q' at Scituate Harbor, the letter 'B' at a playground in Cohasset, and the letter 'R' in a tree in Hingham.

Each letter and picture is accompanied by an anecdotal history of the town. In "Hingham From A to Z," the letter 'w' helps explain the history of World's End, Whitney and Thayer Woods, and Wompatuck State Park.

Daly sees the anecdotal history aspect of her books acts as a "catalyst for history" and hopes that after reading, the readers are intrigued with their town and go learn more about their town and its history.

Daly believes that if "you don't know about your town, you don't love it" and her ABC Books provide readers with a "real connection to the town."

Daly has donated copies of her books to their respective libraries and schools, and are also on sale at area shops, including Buttonwoods Books and Toys in Cohasset, and Harbor Light Toys in Scituate.

It takes Daly a year to make her ABC Books and relies on her children, Andrea and Gregory, for help with computer formatting and illustrations. Daly said the hardest part is eliminating extra pictures and facts.

Each book is special to their town as Daly adds something unique to the book. For example, "Hingham From A to Z" has illustrations drawn on every page, while "Miami Lakes From A to Z" has a riddle throughout the book. Furthermore, Daly reaches out to citizens of the town and historical societies for helps and to get as much information as possible.

Daly's books encourage children to "use their imagination and observation skills" to find letters where they might not be expected. Daly's favorite part of her book making process is working with children once the book is complete and "seeing their eyes light up when they find the letter."

Cohasset Girl Scout receives Gold Award

Girl Scouts of Eastern Massachusetts announced Cohasset Girl Scout Jennifer Curley received her Girl Scout Gold Award pin at a ceremony attended by family, friends and Girl Scouts of Eastern Massachusetts Chief Executive Officer Ruth N. Bramson and board President Peggy Stevens.

The Girl Scout Gold Award is the highest award a Girl Scout can achieve, awarded for fulfilling a need within a girl's community, whether local or global, and creating ongoing change. The project encompasses organizational, leadership and networking skills. Only about 5 percent of all Girl Scouts earn this award each year.

For her "Girl Scout Women of Cohasset through the Years" project, Jennifer conducted interviews with community leaders whose lives were influenced by their involvement in Girl Scouts. The years reported on spanned from the 1900s to 2010 and the focus of the interviews was the teachings of Girl Scouting and giving back to the community. Curley later transcribed and showcased the interviews by creating a brochure that is on display at Cohasset Historical Society. Additionally, the exhibit included vintage uniforms and memorabilia. Overall, her project was a great way to utilize her Girl Scouting experience to bridge various generations within her community.

Cohasset youth participates in Summer Immersion in France

Taylor Golz, son of Erik and Barbara Golz of Cohasset, recently participated in Boston College High School's Summer Immersion Program in Lyon, France.

Taylor spent three weeks living with a French family, taking classes at Centre Saint Marc, the Jesuit High School of Lyon, and learning of the city's history, which dates back to antiquity.

Among the sites visited were the Roman Amphitheatre, Gallo Roman and Fine Arts museums and the Center of French Resistance and Deportation. The trip culminated with a three-day excursion to Paris where Taylor toured such historical monuments as the Eiffel Tower, the Louvre, Notre Dame and the Chateau of Versailles.

The French Summer Institute is part of Boston College High School's Global Education Program, which also includes programs in Argentina, China and Ireland.

A garden grows in Cohasset

Vegetable garden brings hope to patient, family

By Roisin O'Flaherty
Special to the Mariner

Rows of cucumbers, green beans, zucchini, watermelon, four different varieties of tomatoes and two different types of eggplant, spring onions, parsley, basil, mint and chives were planted.

On a sweltering summer morning in Cohasset, a group of breast cancer patient Sue Omran's friends arrived at her house with shovels in hand. They came ready to change the landscape with the help of Hope in Bloom, a Dedham based non-profit that plants flower or vegetable gardens free of charge at the homes of breast cancer patients. Claire and Ray Haddad and Rebecca Glynn of Cohasset joined landscape architect Tina Pierdinock and Hope in Bloom's founder, Roberta Hershon, to install an organic vegetable garden in Omran's yard.

Pierdinock of Nature's Palette Landscape Design in Duxbury met with Omran previously to discuss her garden layout and the type of vegetables she wanted to grow. Omran, who now leaves the family cooking up to her very talented mother, was interested in produce and herbs used in dishes from the Middle East. Rows of cucumbers, green beans, zucchini, watermelon, four different varieties of tomatoes and two different types of eggplant, spring onions, parsley, basil, mint and chives were planted. A bed of heated hay was laid around the seedlings to suppress any weeds. Spinach will be sown in a few weeks and eventually will find its way into fathiya, a Lebanese spinach turnover.

Anna Marini, CEO of AVO Fence in Hingham and Stoughton generously donated a cedar fence and gate to enclose the garden and keep deer and rabbits out. Obelisks flank either side of the gate and sport ribbons of Dr. Rupert clematis. Mounds of Cranesbill geraniums line the exterior length of the fence. A teak bench beckons visitors to sit.

Omran spoke Portuguese and lived in Brazil until she was eleven when her family moved to the United States. She quickly learned English and thought she would become a doctor. Right after high school, her family relocated to Lebanon. She taught herself Arabic and attended the American University of Beirut. Instead of premed, she majored in sociology. She met her husband in college, and shortly after graduation, they left for the States to live the American dream. Life was good. She continued her education and trained to become a kindergarten teacher and then a Montessori schoolteacher.

Omran is a mother of three girls, ages eight, five and one, and finds strength in her vast network of friends, family, and former co-workers at the Inly School in Scituate. She credits them for helping her through the tough moments and making her journey as smooth as possible. Also, her parents, who now live with the Omrans, are a major help as she continues to go through treatment.

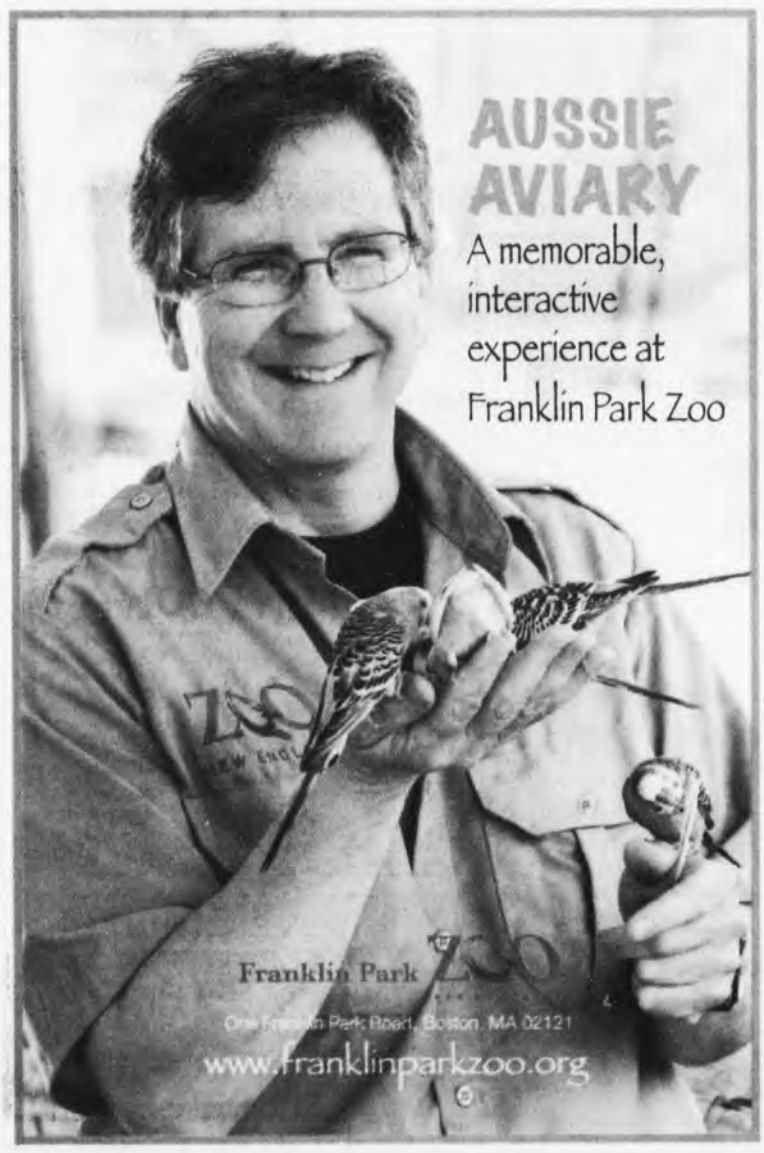
"I encourage every cancer patient to develop a strong support system. It makes all the difference in the world," Omran said.

Omran believes the garden is very therapeutic and part of her healing process. She hopes to spend time sitting on the cedar bench watching her garden grow and cutting and harvesting its bounty for her family to eat.

"It's a relief not to have to worry about whether or not there are pesticides on the food my family and I eat," she said.

Her new Hope in Bloom garden inspires her to remain positive, "I don't have time to be depressed. I know it's tough, but there is hope, and lots of it. I am going to beat this," she declared.

Tina Pierdinock, left, and Claire Haddad of Cohasset figure out where to put the vegetables in Sue Omran's garden.



Sue Omran offers Lebanese food to Tina Pierdinock and the rest of the volunteers for lunch during the garden planting.

Rebecca Glynn of Scituate lays down planting soil in the garden that they were building for breast cancer patient Sue Omran. PHOTOS/ROBIN CHAN

A message for Sue Omran is left by her children on a wall in her living room while her own mother works in the kitchen. Omran was diagnosed with stage 4 breast cancer on April 4, 2011. Hope in Bloom is building a vegetable garden for her and her family outside of her home. She only eats organic food ever since her diagnosis and this garden will help her out significantly.

But that all changed when a major illness took her by surprise last year.

"The surgeons told me they considered me an medical anomaly," Amaral said. "They told me I should have died."

For Amaral, the experience put a lot of things in perspective.

"It was God bonking me on the head. Health and wellness is my passion...and I truly believe the way I eat and my lifestyle is what made the difference," Amaral said.

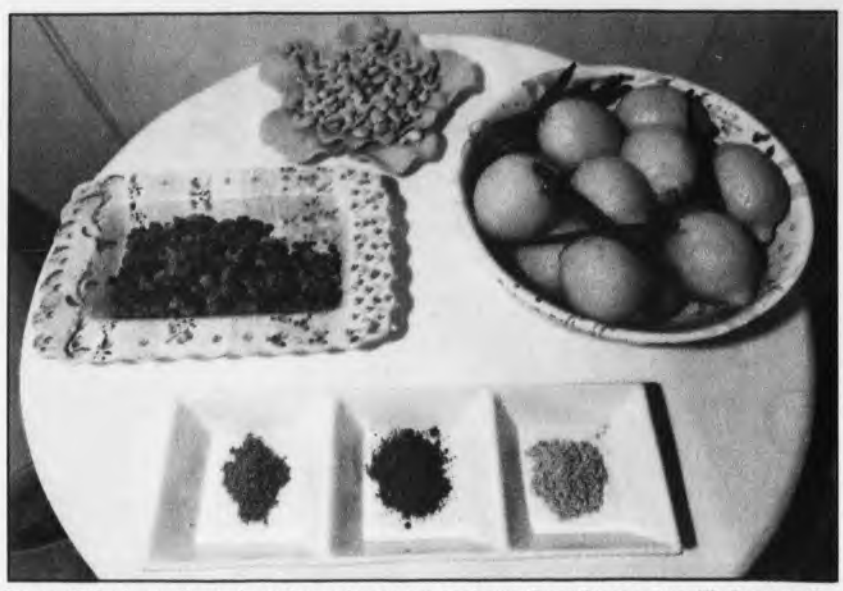
It was then that she chose not to return to finance and do something different with her life.

"This is my life's passion: to help others live healthier," Amaral said.

In addition to crafting her snacks, which she does with classical music in the background, Amaral has nearly completed her Studies of Integrative Nutrition Therapies to be a certified holistic health coach and will also be a member of the American Association of Drugless Practitioners. Amaral is just now beginning to see clients.

"I came into this with no expectations and I'm trying to enjoy every minute of it," Amaral said.

The "treats" are made from organic ingredients and they are vegan, raw, gluten-free, soy-free, dairy-free, sugar-free and made without any trans-fat. Despite of – or perhaps because of – what they lack, Amaral said the snacks are "delicious."



"Everyone needs a treat now and then. This is a mindful power snack that replenishes, sustains and nourishes one's body," Amaral said, adding that other snacks or nutrition bars are deceiving in what they offer.

"(Other snacks advertised to replenish) are sugar-laden, gluten-laden that do nothing but deplete one's energy stores," Amaral said.

The Authentically You! Power Snacks come in different flavors and are for the most part fruit and nut based. What she calls "power squares" have flavors like blueberry pecan, cashew date and triple berry (goji berries, Incan berried and mulberries) walnut.

Amaral is also selling "macaroons," which are raw, coconut-based (with coconut oil) snacks. She dressed them up with a variety of organic ingredients. She said one of her best sellers right now is the chocolate cinnamon macaroon. She used organic, pure raw cacao to craft these snacks.

Like the "crafted" snacks, Amaral put a lot of thought into the packaging of her product. The power squares are in biodegradable, compost-able, re-sealable packaging. The writing on the packaging is in soy-based ink.

Some of the ingredients Lara Amaral uses are cashews, fresh lemons, vanilla bean, goji berry, Incan berry, mulberry, cardamon, cayenne, and ginger. STAFF PHOTO/ ROBIN CHAN

Amaral said that nine times out of 10 when someone tries her product at the farmers market, they buy something.

"I didn't know I had this in me, but I think I'm now on the right path," Amaral said.

HEALTH NOTES

Enjoy Cohasset and wear sunscreen

STEVE BOBO

The summer, just now finally beginning, has become different in Cohasset in several ways: For example, the water: bays, inlets, etc., have become cleaner and the various places to walk are more attractive than they've been for years. The leaves are more abundant and seemingly greener with far more flora everywhere.

This year, getting outside to walk around is particularly rewarding among rocky Cohasset's many ledges and outcroppings. The Cove and The Gulf provide a border with Scituate, while Straits Pond divides Hull from the town on the northwest. In between, other pleasant brooks and rivers running through the town add to walking enjoyment. A large portion of the southwestern part of town is occupied by the Wompatuck State Park, the old Hingham Naval Ammunition Depot and the Whitney and Thayer Woods Reservation. There is also a bird sanctuary, as well as Wheelwright Park near Red Gate Lane at one end and Forest Avenue at the other, all suitably marked.

Recently, Health Notes, in support of walking activity in general, set out to observe the various public trails and walkways in our respective parks. These are all easily accessible with parking for those driving to the spot. Also, to greater and lesser extent, they are marked and mapped. Maps are posted at trailheads with copies available at the Town Hall Recreation Department. The maps and trail markings have been provided by the Eagle program under guidance from the Eagle Scouts and their mentors.

Coastal pollution monitors are reporting lower levels of contamination up and down the coastline. Good timing for beachgoers and those who get out in the sun. We'd like to attribute all such changes to the work of the Center for Student Research at Parker Avenue, but such is probably not the case. Nevertheless with better access to sunny days and the various concomitant outside activities, it's necessary to be more vigilant about casual use of lotions and blockers. That's all of us. Whether we're sitting out in the patio, supposedly protected from the sun, walking in one of Cohasset's beautiful parks or any other place, it's possible that you can come into contact with too much sun.

Sunburn and sun poisoning facts:

- Sunburn is an inflammation of the skin caused by overexposure to UV radiation from the sun. UV radiation damages the skin and also can damage the eyes.
- Most intense at noon and the hours immediately before and after (between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m.) immediate symptoms of sunburn are hot, red, tender skin; pain when the skin is touched or rubbed; and dehydration. Several days after exposure the skin may swell, blister and peel.
- Most sunburns are mild and can be treated with home remedies such as applying damp cloths or compresses to reduce the pain, soaking in a tepid bath (with no soap), gently patting the skin dry, applying soothing creams or lotions, OTC pain relievers such as Tylenol or others, and moisturizing the skin. However, sunburn may cause permanent skin damage and skin cancer (malignant melanoma, basal cell carcinoma, squamous cell carcinoma).
- UV rays may reflect with almost full intensity off water, sand, snow and other surfaces.
- Some types of skin tan after exposure to UV rays because, after repeated or prolonged exposure rays, the skin produces more melanin.
- Persons with certain pigment disorders and individuals with fair skin are at most risk of sunburn.
- Certain diseases and conditions pose a higher risk of sunburn; for example, albinism, porphyrias, and xeroderma pigmentosum.
- Some medications may increase sensitivity to sunburn (photosensitivity).
- The best way to prevent sunburn is to avoid long exposure to sunlight.
- Sunscreen and sun-protective clothing are important measures to limit sun damage.
- Apply sunscreen before going outdoors, apply it liberally, and re-apply frequently.
- Sun poisoning is caused by severe sunburn; its symptoms include fever, nausea, chills, dizziness, rapid pulse, rapid breathing, dehydration and shock.

For Michele, one of the greatest advances in cancer care has been the one on the South Shore.

When Michele needed treatment for breast cancer, she was thankful that she could receive world-renowned care at Dana-Farber/Brigham and Women's Cancer Center in clinical affiliation with South Shore Hospital. And she had confidence knowing that our specialists, focused on cancer, were providing the expert care she needed. But she also found something more: how important it was to be treated in a place that not only cared for her cancer, but also for her life.

"It's a place filled with hope," said Michele. And having all the integrated services she needed close to home helped her maintain a sense of normalcy through her treatments. "With two small kids, I don't know how I would have managed otherwise," she explained. "Having this level of cancer care on the South Shore — it means everything to me."

THANK YOU TO ALL THE READERS WHO VOTED FOR US AS YOUR REGIONAL FAVORITE FOR 8 YEARS IN A ROW!

What an amazing year!
Here are a few things that we are especially proud of from the past year.

Redken Hall of Fame Induction
Well, this was by far the most exciting thing that happened to us over the past year. In January, David and Buddy were called up on stage at the Redken Symposium show in Las Vegas in front of 10,000 people and were presented with the 1st ever Redken Hall of Fame award. It was a night we will never forget and we were so happy that many of our stylists were with us to share in the experience.

South Shore Hospital Cancer Care
One in three people is affected by cancer. That is why we think it is so important to support South Shore Hospital's mission to provide comprehensive cancer care on the South Shore. Our annual Benefit Day raised $20,000 this year. Our talented salon & spa staff work for an entire day for free and all money from the days services is donated to the very worthy Journey of Hope Campaign, for more info visit www.southshorehospital.org

Ellie Fund Fun
We have to admit it. Helping the Ellie Fund is FUN! As the official hair & make-up providers to this local breast cancer charity, we get to meet a lot of inspiring people and get them ready to attend all their swanky events. From breast cancer survivors and Oscar nominated actors to all the gorgeous news ladies from Ch. 5, we take pride in making these ladies sparkle at the Oscar Boston Gala and the Kelley For Ellie events. We are especially proud of our generous staff who donates their time at these events to raise even more money for this wonderful cause, helping women and families fight breast cancer. www.elliefund.org

OUR VIEW

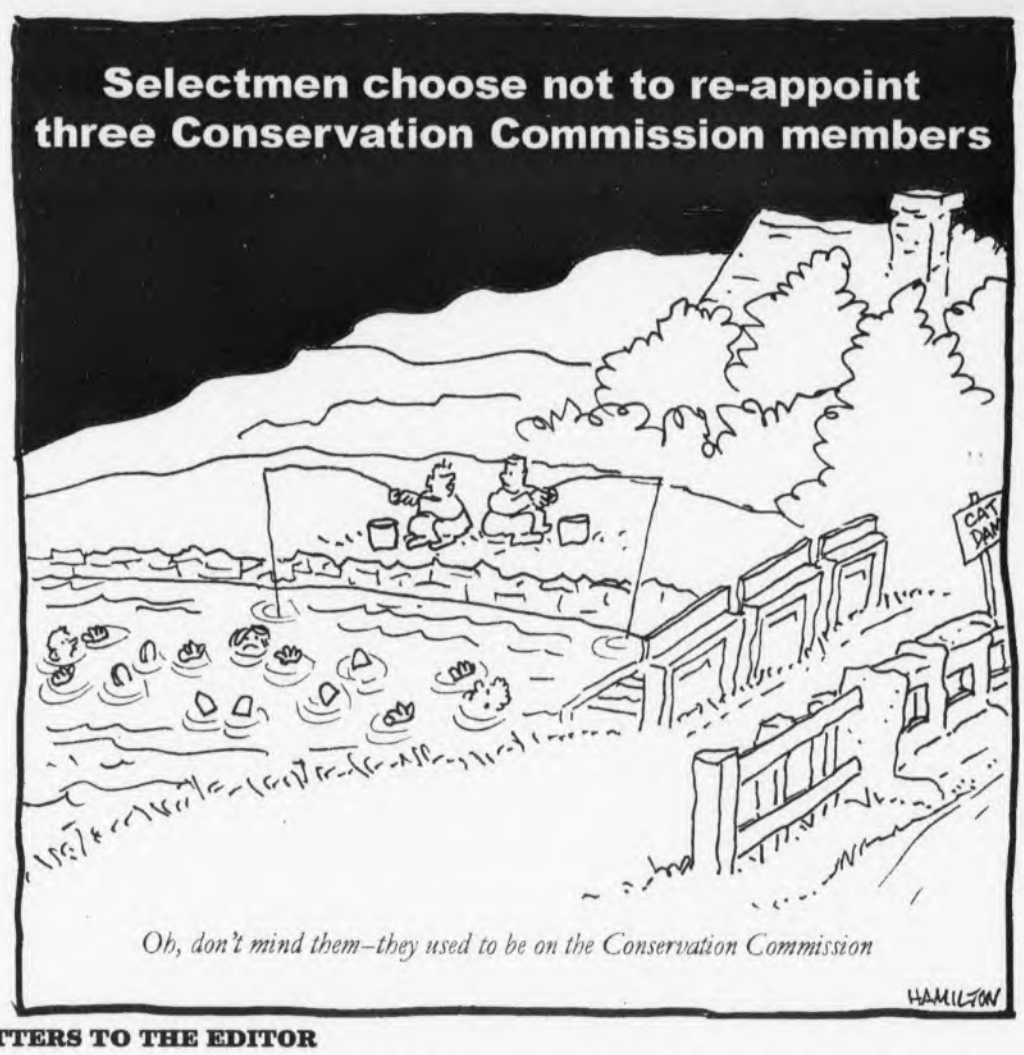
Thanks, Nancy

Those who follow the Cohasset Mariner closely have probably heard the "rumor" that staff reporter Nancy White is moving on.

The good news is that Nancy is not leaving the Mariner group. She is taking over the editorship of the Scituate Mariner and the Marshfield Mariner. It is a well deserved promotion for Nancy and we are proud and honored that she got most of her training right here in Cohasset.

Nancy joined the Cohasset Mariner 4-1/2 years ago. While the time seems to have flown by – over the years Nancy has tackled myriad complex issues, covered innumerable meetings, and written hundreds of human-interest feature stories – just to name just some of her many duties!

She has proven to be an invaluable help on production day for Cohasset where deadline pressures can make us crazy and she pitches in tackling many of the editor's duties when the editor is on vacation.



Nancy is also an award-winning journalist with two NENPA awards to her credit.

While awards are nice and the "frosting on the cake" – Nancy has been an award-inner for us week-in and week-out.

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we will be "bouncing things" off Nancy for some time to come, as she has the most knowledge about current affairs.

We are in the process of hiring a new reporter; one who is ready to jump right in and provide Cohasset with the type of coverage that our town has come to expect.

Please join us in wishing Nancy all the best in her new position and in thanking her for all her hard work, dedication and determination in serving our readers for the past 4-1/2 years.

YOUR OPINION MATTERS

We welcome letters from our readers. Writers should include their name, address and a contact number (for verification purposes, not for publication). We include the street address on letters. We do not accept anonymous letters.

Deadline for letters is noon, Wednesday. We can stretch that deadline a little, if the letter can be sent by email. Please call Mary Ford with questions at 781-741-2933.

Longer letters may be used as commentaries at the discretion of the editor.

Letters may be sent by email to Mary Ford at mford@wickedlocal.com; by mail to the Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham, MA 02043, dropped off at the office, or sent by fax at 718-741-2931.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Senior Center project

In a recent article published in the Cohasset Mariner, it was reported that the Social Service League of Cohasset has offered to fulfill a need and build the Town of Cohasset a new senior center. Some have asked why the Social Service League. We have a long history of helping seniors in Cohasset. Since 1912 the Social Service League has been providing Cohasset's seniors with daily and holiday meals, housing assistance, and other various services.

Given our passionate belief and the need of a new facility this public/private partnership is the perfect way of being able to provide much needed services to residents of Cohasset. With an already fiscally stretched town government it would be impossible to place the burden on the taxpayers with an override.

We believe that it is our responsibility to step up to the plate for our seniors and work with the Town to build a vibrant facility capable of complementing and extending the programs currently run by the Council on Aging.

In 2009 we were very fortunate to become administrators of the Mary Hooper Trust. Building a place for the elderly to remain independent, to "age in place", in Cohasset was Mary Hooper's dying wish. However, at the time of her death in 1924, there simply wasn't enough money left in her estate to build one or sustain one. Time and sound investing has given us the opportunity to pursue her dream.

With the number of residents in Cohasset over the age of 60 expected to increase by 50 percent in the next 10 years the time for building a new senior center is now. I ask that you join us in support of this once in a lifetime opportunity to build a dynamic and vibrant space for those that have given so much to the town we call home.

We welcome the opportunity to answer any questions you may have and can be reached at 781-383-0771.

Use of finance committees

I have to wonder what the purpose of having extremely intelligent financial committees are when their well-qualified opinions are either unsolicited or ignored. The current Board of Selectmen has been unsupportive when the opinions of those committees don't mesh with their agenda. And their agenda is obviously not what's best for the Town of Cohasset but for the special interest groups as shown by their decision last night not to approve current Conservation Commission members with years of experience but to appoint residents who will unquestionably bow to them and make decisions that will benefit the chosen. Any expenditures that fall outside the departmental budgets should have the approval of the Capital Budget and Advisory committees before being brought forward for public discussion. They should not pushed through the back door of the Selectmen's Office without some financial impact study. This is why these committees were formed. Where is the Ethics Commission when you need them?

It also bothers me that the Cohasset Mariner thinks they should have a voice when it comes to tax dollars being spent. Unless they live here and contribute to those taxes they should keep their opinions to themselves and let the residents decide how their taxes should be spent. Just saying...

FROM THE REPORTER'S DESK

Mixing it up in Cohasset

NANCY WHITE

For four years, I have trolled the streets of Cohasset, met residents at French Memories, become a fixture at Selectmen and School Committee meetings and learned more about sewer systems and wind turbines than I ever could have imagined.

On my first day as the Cohasset Mariner reporter, I covered a Selectmen's meeting. It was a well-attended meeting and the large crowd emptied into the hallway, making a quick exit impossible. I was shy and, of course, nervous. I knew no one, didn't know what questions to ask and felt slightly out of place.

Perhaps seeing my hesitations, Selectman Fred Koed came over to me, welcomed me to Cohasset and said, "Go ahead, mix it up."

That was more than four years ago, and I've been following Fred's advice ever since. Along the way I lost most of my shyness and nerves rarely enter the picture. Everywhere I go now in Cohasset, there are familiar faces that greet me by name.

Mixing it up has become second nature.

I am writing this column today because my time in Cohasset has come to a close. This issue you hold in your hands is my final one as the reporter of the Cohasset Mariner. I have been promoted and will be the editor of two of Cohasset's sister publications, the Marshfield Mariner and Scituate Mariner, as of next week.

I'm excited and ready for this challenge, but it is also bittersweet. It means saying goodbye to a town — and its wonderful residents — that I have come to love.

For four years, I have trolled the streets of Cohasset, met residents at French Memories, become a fixture at Selectmen and School Committee meetings and learned more about sewer systems and wind turbines than I ever could have imagined.

I've built meaningful and rewarding relationships with so many of you out there reading this. We've had long phone conversations and exchanged countless emails. I've written stories about tragedies and triumphs, lobster boats and town history, budgets and real estate development, ghosts and stormwater — you name it and I've probably written a story about it! Tackling complex issues over the course of months, and in some cases years, has been at once frustrating and oddly satisfying.

It hasn't been easy, but it has always been fun.

At its very core, the job of a reporter is about listening and trying to understand. I have learned so much from listening to hundreds of you over the course of the last few years. You've kept this job fresh and exciting.

Cohasset is known far and wide for its scenic coast, quaint village and pristine town common, but it's truly the residents who make this community what it is.

Thank you for welcoming me into your homes, trusting me with your stories, engaging me in conversation, taking my phone calls on deadline and being willing to tell me when something was not quite right. You have pushed me to be my best — and to give my best — and I hope I met that challenge.

A special thank you to my editor and mentor, Mary Ford, as well as my co-workers in the Hingham office: Carol Meyer, Sandra Russell and Peg Charlton. They have served as sounding boards and confidants and made many, many crazy days bearable. Also, thank you to Robin Chan, our intrepid staff photographer, who has made so many of my stories jump off the page with his photographs.

The Cohasset Mariner has proven to me that newspapers will not fade into the distance, not if there are communities to support them. Journalism is best when it engages the citizens and calls them to action. We strive to do that week in and week out and this community continues to answer back.

For that reason, I know the residents of Cohasset will be saying "I read it in the Mariner" for years and years to come.

Although you won't see my face as often around town, please know that Cohasset will always be in my heart. It is my second hometown, and I won't be able to stay away for long.

1-4-3, Cohasset.

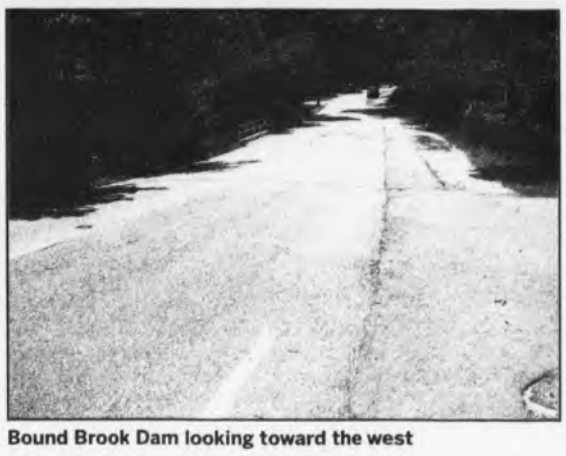
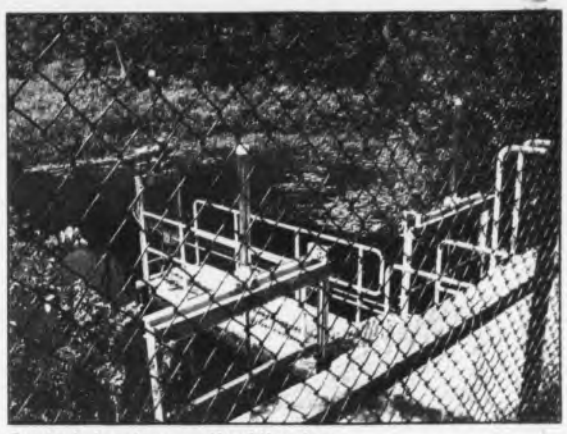
MAKING TRACKS



Leak test at Jacobs Meadow is a success

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN



Jacobs Meadow Outfall Project: As we mentioned last week there are a few small things that still need to be checked out on this project. One of these was to conduct a leak test of the new 6-by-10 foot vertical sluice gate. Since the function of this gate is to manage the water in the channel, it is important that the gate not leak water when it is closed. In fact, our specifications require that no more than 3.2 gallons per minute can leak from the gate when it is closed.

So, on Monday of this week, our engineers conducted a leak test. The gate was manually closed at high tide. Rather than let the gate do its thing on automatic, it was left closed until low tide. This had the effect of trapping more than six feet of water behind the gate. At low tide we went back to look at the gate to see if there were any visible leaks any where around the perimeter of the gate. We did see two tiny dribbles that we will investigate further. But, by and large the test was deemed to be quite successful. Before we reopened the gate, the water had backed up in Jacobs Meadow. When the gate was opened, the water in the channel dropped by about six feet in less than an hour. That's a real improvement in flow from the prior structures that were replaced by this project.

Important Message about Beechwood St.: Beechwood St. will be closed to thru traffic Thursday, July 21. The Bound Brook Dam is one of several dams located in Cohasset. Most residents we have spoken with don't seem to know much about it. So, we'll give you a quick overview. Bound Brook Dam, it turns out, is nearly invisible because it is literally under Beechwood Street, on the western side of route 3A. First, look at the really big picture. There is a large reservoir called the Aaron River Reservoir, at the end of Beechwood Street, which lies in the towns of Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate. Bound Brook flows out of the Aaron River reservoir to the Bound Brook dam, and on into Scituate and then back into Cohasset via the Gulf River. A small leg of Bound Brook connects Lily Pond to Bound Brook. It is this leg that allows Aaron River water to flow into Lily Pond to meet the Water Department needs for Cohasset. A control structure has been constructed at the Bound Brook Dam so that the level of water in Bound Brook can be adjusted, thus controlling the level of water in Lily Pond.

Bound Brook Dam looking toward the west

Control structure north of the dam

The first photo shows Beechwood Street, looking to the west, where it crosses over Bound Brook Dam. The railing on the left side of the road marks where Bound Brook passes through the dam. Yep, we said "through." So, now let's go back to our description of the Bound Brook Dam. The dam is an earthen embankment structure 200 feet long and 42 feet wide. Beechwood St. actually runs over and parallel to the dam. There are two stone and metal culverts that pierce the dam under the road. These culverts allow the flow of Bound Brook to pass through the dam. The control structure is separate from the dam and is located to the north of Beechwood Street. It is constructed of concrete with several adjustable sluice gates. It is these gates that precisely control the water level in Lily Pond. There is also a fish ladder to allow migrating fish to traverse the dam. The second photo shows the control structure just beyond the black chain link fence.

So, now we know where the Bound Brook Dam is and what it does. Now things get interesting. The Commonwealth has a department called the Office of Dam Safety that is charged with keeping track of the various dams in Massachusetts and their condition. As a part of this condition reporting, the Town must provide a periodic inspection reports. To accomplish this, the Town had to engage the services of a consulting engineer who specializes in such things. As a part of the detailed inspection of the dam the engineer must take soil borings in the earthen part of the dam to assess its condition.

Now here comes the rub! Remember, the earthen dam lies under Beechwood Street. So, in order to take borings of the dam earthworks we will need to close Beechwood Street for the better part of a day so the large boring machine can do its thing. Consequently, Beechwood Street will be closed starting about 8 a.m. for a period of six to eight hours on Thursday, July 21. If you travel Beechwood Street, you know it is a main artery to the Norwell area and beyond. The best detour will be to take Scituate's Booth Hill Road from Route 3A to Clapp Road to Summer Street. We are working with the Cohasset Police Department to manage the flow of traffic. The Cohasset Fire Department will be stationing a vehicle and crew on the other side of the closure to improve their ability to respond to emergencies. We apologize for any inconvenience, but this is just one of those things that need to be done. If you have any questions, feel free to contact the Greenbush Office at 781-383-3094.

COMMENTARY

No way to treat volunteers

MARGIE AND STEVE BROWN

On Tuesday night, a majority of the Board of Selectmen (Paul Carlson, Fred Koed and Leland Jenkins) chose not to reappoint three very competent members of the Conservation Commission: Sarah Charron, Debbie Cook and Dick Karoff.

Charron has a master's degree in environmental engineering from the top-ranked school in that field and has at least 10 years of professional experience in environmental engineering. She is a licensed environmental engineer in Massachusetts and has served on the Conservation Commission for six years.

Cook has served for at least 20 years on the Conservation Commission, part of that time as chair, and she was instrumental in bringing the Community Preservation Act to Cohasset. Initially, during the start of her tenure, it was not uncommon for the Conservation Commission to be sued by unhappy citizens. Over the last 20 years, this commission has worked hard to be collaborative and not incur lawsuits. Debbie is a lifelong environmentalist who works for the North and South Rivers Watershed Association.

Karoff has been involved in protecting the health of Cohasset Harbor for many years and has served on the Conservation Commission for three years. All three of these wonderful volunteers wished to remain on the commission. Their service has been without reproach; they act ethically and have never disregarded the Open Meeting Law.

Instead, selectmen chose to replace these three qualified volunteers with three new faces. These three new commissioners had applications delivered to town hall by a member of the group called the Environmental 20, also known as the E20 group. The E20 is a subset of Inner Little Harbor neighbors who have privately paid for a lawyer and engineers to develop a Notice of Intent (NOI) for the operation of Cat Dam.

Regardless of how you feel about Cat Dam, the sorry experience here is that Carlson, Koed and Jenkins disregarded the dedication of these hard-working, qualified volunteers — all three of whom wanted to continue to serve — and replaced them with candidates who are either members of the E20 or solicited by the E20, a group that has an issue pending before the Con Comm.

Carlson, Jenkins and Koed chose last year to replace the town-funded, publicly bid Notice of Intent with the E20 NOI, and this E20 NOI is currently before the Conservation Commission. Tom Killilea, a member of the E20, delivered six last-minute applications for the commission to Town Hall on the day before the selectmen's meeting whose agenda included the reappointments. The seventh new application was from another E20 member, Briscoe Rodgers, which was delivered within a couple of hours of Killilea's delivery.

In total, four of the seven last-minute applicants are members of the E20. Since the other three had their applications delivered by Killilea and the wording of all these applications is very similar, it is hard to believe that they were independently inspired at the 11th hour to volunteer for the Conservation Commission. The commission has been advertising for the last two years that they had open associate positions, and selectmen had not received one application until the day before this hearing when they received the seven delivered by the a member of the E20.

Carlson, Koed, and Jenkins appointed the three new Conservation Commission members as full members, instead of the past practice of starting them as associate members. Associate members participate in all activities but cannot vote. This gives them time to learn about the commission's responsibilities and the details of the Massachusetts Wetlands Protection Act, which they are mandated to enforce. Based on the application letters and brief statements made by the new members, they do not have relevant experience comparable to the three displaced members.

Regardless of how you feel about Cat Dam, the sorry experience here is that Carlson, Koed and Jenkins disregarded the dedication of these hard-working, qualified volunteers — all three of whom wanted to continue to serve — and replaced them with candidates who are either members of the E20 or solicited by the E20, a group that has an issue pending before the Con Comm.

The new members may or may not choose to recuse themselves from the Cat Dam deliberations, but their appointments show a lack of respect by the three selectmen for the independent environmental focus that is crucial for a good Conservation Commission. The Conservation Commission is not designed to be a political committee. Its role is defined as a regulatory board required by the Massachusetts Wetlands Protection Act.

Consider for yourself whether this precedent bodes well for Cohasset town management.

There is an appearance that the E20 has an inordinate amount of influence on these three selectmen, who turned a blind eye to the possibility of conflict of interest for those newly appointed Conservation Commission members. Do you feel that you could have a fair hearing before the selectmen if you do not have a connection with the "right" group?

We want to publicly thank Sarah Charron, Debbie Cook and Dick Karoff for their many years of service to Cohasset and to protecting the environment. Cohasset is a better place today because of their service.

Margie and Steve Brown live at 275 Jerusalem Road.

My journey as an artist

By Jim Marten

"Let me disclose the gifts reserved for age, for last year's words belong to last year's language. And next year's words another voice." T.S. Elliot, "Little Gidding."

Having caught the last shuttle from New York City one night, I found my fellow passengers exhausted and asleep. Not only that, they were, for the most part, at least 20 years younger than I. It was September 1996.

Arriving home, I remarked to my wife Shirley that I could not live this business life anymore. Shirley replied, "In that case, you must find another passion." She knows me better than I know myself, for I did not know what she meant.

Buddhists believe that life has patterns according to which we must try to harmonize ourselves. On reflection, I realized that this was the time for something entirely new. I decided to teach myself to draw and paint.

Shirley perceptively observed, "In that case, you must treat it seriously as your new occupation and find a studio away from the house." I joined an artists' cooperative which had recently formed in Rockland called The Fourth Floor Artists, and the South Shore Art Center and found another life and friends I could not have encountered elsewhere.

I was soon startled to discover, because of the manner by which I chose to paint, that there were many similarities to my previous life in business. This may explain why I was attracted to this new endeavor in the first place. What was surprising was that propensity for risk, innovation and ability to recover from failure were also present in the practice of art.

On reflection, I realized that this was the time for something entirely new. I decided to teach myself to draw and paint.

In 1968 I had come upon a retrospective of Willem de Kooning's paintings in the Stedelijk Museum in Amsterdam. At that time, I knew nothing about abstract expressionism, indeed nothing about art. I received an emotional shock, almost a physical jolt, and although I was overcome with what I saw, I was at the same time bewildered and uncomprehending.

This experience seems to have laid low in my consciousness for the subsequent quarter of a century. Now, that singular experience 25 years ago, that impact of the new, has led me to a joyous renewal in my later life in art. To my surprise and gratitude, de Kooning had come back to me without warning.

As Bob Dylan said in song "Ah, but I was so much older then, but now I'm younger than that now." ("My Back Pages.")

To have lived a life, a full life, and to have lived long enough to make some sense of de Kooning is a gift unexpectedly given me.

To try to understand the artistic process I choose to follow, I recently summarized some of my thoughts:

1. Don't do what you do well. Remove what you love most in your work, otherwise you become a prisoner of style. Keep looking for what was eliminated in a different way.

2. Seek surprise of the unexpected. Try not to be right. Do not stay with the familiar, but find what causes discomfort.

3. Art does not have to be a certain way. Learn how to paint modern by yourself. Art that works is puzzling and will remain so, or even more so, with time.

4. Endure the frustration of being within a short distance from a solution and remain so for as long as possible. You will arrive at resolution, but not the way you imagined.

5.Don't look for ideas, look for linkages and the foundation of those linkages found throughout art, past and present.

6. And finally, use what John Keats called "negative capability" – uncertainty, doubt, the edge of failure. Remain on the edge of failure. Identify with openness, not self-protection; the absence of identity instead of guarding identity.

I hope this story is helpful to aspiring artists, as I was 15 years ago.

Jim Marten has a painting in the Blue Ribbon Members Show currently on exhibit at the South Shore Art Center.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Sixty years of Music Circus history

Historical Society exhibit celebrates local venue

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

In the early 1950s, what might have been an unlikely location — a horse farm in the heart of Cohasset — was transformed into a destination for music and entertainment.

Sixty years ago this summer, the Music Circus found its home on Sohier Street, a tent went up, people flocked and an institution was born. Every summer since, the Music Circus has returned to entertain audiences under the big top.

To celebrate and commemorate the Music Circus's history and longevity, the Cohasset Historical Society has put together an exhibit featuring the stars, the costumes, the music and the stories behind it all. The exhibit fills up the two main rooms in the Pratt Building on South Main Street, where the historical society is headquartered.

"We pulled everything out from our vast Music Circus archives, everything from photographs to playbills to letters to mailing," said Lynne DeGiacomo, executive director of the Cohasset Historical Society.

When the Music Circus began, it was a much different time and it had a much different business model. Each week, the Music Circus would feature a musical. The first musical performed under the tent on Sohier Street was "Show Boat." The leads for the production were big names in their day, many of them boasting Broadway credits. A chorus was hired to stay on throughout the summer to fill out the cast.

Other musicals performed (and featured in the exhibit) include "Bloomer Girl," "Brigadoon," "Wonderful Town," "High Button Shoes" and "Pajama Game." DeGiacomo said they have tons of photos from various shows in which the society isn't sure of the musicals. People who attended the shows over the years may recognize themselves in the audience.

To supplement the historical pieces on the Music Circus, DeGiacomo used pieces from the society's textile collection to re-create the effect of some of the musical's costumes.

Sometime in the mid-1960s, the Music Circus began to offer a combination of musicals and entertainers. Bigger stars came too, Ginger Rogers starred as Coco Chanel in the musical "Coco."

Residents had run-ins with the stars, as they usually came in for two shows and some were often seen about Cohasset.

The South Shore Music Circus has gone through several transformations over the years, both in its business and streetscape. This photo is how the Music Circus appeared when it got its start in the early 1950s. COURTESY PHOTOS

In the 1970s, Ginger Rogers starred as Coco Chanel in the musical "Coco" at the South Shore Music Circus.

"This exhibit certainly speaks to people who remember those days vividly and with fond memories."

Lynne DeGiacomo

"This exhibit certainly speaks to people who remember those days vividly and with fond memories," DeGiacomo said. The historical society is hoping to develop a "living history" portion of the exhibit filled with people's memories, memorabilia and photographs. They welcome any loans from the community for the exhibit.

Town Historian David Wadsworth had first-hand knowledge of the early years at the Music Circus. In the summer of 1954, he served as an unpaid apprentice at the Music Circus. In that role, he worked out back constructing and painting scenery and was part of the crew that moved the scenery on and off stage.

While tent theaters used to be all over the place, he said many of them have disappeared.

"Musicals just did not draw enough. The South Shore Music Circus and (its sister tent, the Cape Cod Melody Tent) in Hyannis survived because they did change and started bringing in entertainers," Wadsworth said.

Wadsworth did get a chance on the stage of the Music Circus, playing a bit role as a photographer in "Anything Goes."

Although Cohasset seems like an unlikely place, it has a strong association with entertainment over the years. The Music Circus itself was born out of a summer theatre project, the South Shore Players, operating out of Cohasset Town Hall since 1933. Names still familiar, like Humphrey Bogart, performed there. Even before that, actors flocked to Howard Gleason Road so much so that it became known as "Actor's Row." The town also was host to famous acrobats the Hanlon Brothers.

The exhibit on the Music Circus will be up for the remainder of the summer.

Celebrate the Music Circus

A red carpet event to celebrate 60 years of the South Shore Music Circus will be held sometime in September at the Pratt Building. Look for details sometime in August.

The Cohasset Historical Society is located at 106 South Main St. and is open Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Call 781-383-1434 for information.

Museums are open

Cohasset Historical Society's museums are now open for the summer. Located at 4 Elm St., downtown Cohasset, are the 1810 Captain John Wilson House and the 18th century Bates Ship Chandlery or Maritime Museum. The museums showcase the early history of Cohasset. The Wilson House shows how a family might have lived and includes furnishings and quilts from the early 1800s. The Maritime Museum has a display of maritime artifacts that show the seafaring history of Cohasset, including model ships, artifacts brought back or made on voyages and information on Minot's Ledge Lighthouses. Both buildings are listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

The museums are open from 1 to 4 p.m., Wednesday through Friday, and 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., on Saturdays. For more information, call the Historical Society at 781-383-1434.

July 8, 2011
Volume 37 - Report No. 27

Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) (617) 722-1646 Room 413F

Representative Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) (617) 722-2120 Room 472

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. Beacon Hill Roll Call records local senators' votes on three roll calls from prior legislative sessions. All roll calls are on proposed amendments to the Senate version of a $29.2 billion fiscal 2012 state budget. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week.

STATE EMPLOYEES ON MILITARY DUTY (S 8)

Senate 38-0, approved an amendment extending for three years a current law providing that state employees who are granted a military leave of absence for active military service after September 11, 2001, continue to receive their base state salary reduced by their military salary and do not lose any seniority or benefits. The measure also gives cities, towns and counties the option to offer the same deal to their local employees. The proposal would extend the law, currently scheduled to expire in two months, until September 2014.

Supporters said this temporary law was originally passed in 2003 and would expire in September unless the Legislature extends it. They argued that state employees who risk their lives to serve in the military should not lose money during their service and noted that prior to 2003, state employees were losing an average of $16,000 per year while serving their country.

(A "Yes" vote is for the amendment.)

$1 MILLION TO PROTECT ELDERLY (S 8)

Senate 38-0, approved an amendment increasing funding from $15.2 million to $16.2 million for the state's Elder Protective Services Program that investigates reports of elder abuse across the state.

Supporters said the state has established 22 Protective Services agencies to respond to reports of physical, emotional and sexual abuse, neglect by a caregiver, self-neglect and financial exploitation. They noted that a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week emergency hotline has encouraged reporting of abuse and helped save the lives, money and well-being of countless seniors.

(A "Yes" vote is for the amendment.)

PROHIBIT SHOCK THERAPY (S 8)

Senate 39-0, approved an amendment that would prohibit the use of aversive shock therapy to treat developmentally disabled persons.

Amendment supporters said the use of this outrageous and cruel distribution of shock, pain or discomfort for the purpose of changing behavior is archaic and was first used in the 1930s to "cure" people of being gay. They noted it has resulted in injury and even death and creates deep psychological problems for the patient.

(A "Yes" vote is for the amendment.)

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

IN-STATE TUITION RATES FOR ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS (H 2109) - The Education Committee will hold a hearing on July 20 at 10 a.m. at the Statehouse on a bill allowing illegal immigrants to pay the in-state tuition rates and fees at Massachusetts colleges and universities if they have attended a high school in Massachusetts for at least three years and have graduated or received the equivalent of a diploma. The measure also requires these students to provide the college with an affidavit stating that he or she has filed or will in the future file an application to become a citizen or permanent resident.

Supporters say many of these students were babies when they were brought here by their parents and had no choice about entering the country illegally. They note these hardworking students are currently required to pay out-of-state tuition rates that are up to five times higher than the in-state rate. Some argue many are unable to afford the higher tuition and end up skipping college and working in low-pay, low-skill jobs rather than contributing to the economy in a more meaningful fashion.

Opponents say the state should not offer financial rewards to anyone who has broken the law and is in this country illegally. They note it is also important to point out that these students would not even be able to legally obtain a job in Massachusetts following their graduation from college. Some say it is outrageous to offer low tuition rates to these students while legal citizens from outside Massachusetts, including war veterans, are required to pay higher rates if they attend a Massachusetts state school.

ALIMONY CHANGES (S 665) - The House, without debate, gave initial approval to a bill making sweeping changes in the state's alimony laws including ending lifetime alimony payments in most cases. The proposal replaces the current law that provides only one category of alimony and creates four specific categories of alimony, all with durational limits, including general, rehabilitative, reimbursement and transitional.

The duration of payments is based on the nujmber of years the couple is married. For marriages of five years or less, the maximum alimony term would be 50 percent of the number of the months of marriage; 5 to 10 years would be 60 percent; 10 to 15 years would be 70 percent; 15 to 20 years would be 80 percent; and more than 20 years would be up to the judge.

Other provisions end alimony when the paying spouse reaches full retirement age and prohibit judges from the current practice of considering the income and assets of the payer's second spouse when calculating how much alimony the payer can afford.

The measure has 133 sponsors. Supporters say current alimony laws are antiquated and date back to the time when women did not work outside the home. They argue that many unemployed spouses are getting stuck with unnecessary and unfair lifetime alimony payments they must come up with even if they are laid off.

MEDICAL RECORDS - The Public Health Committee is considering legislation that would require a health care provider to notify and offer patients the opportunity to obtain a copy of their medical records before they are destroyed following a required seven-year retention period (H 604).

BAN BISPENOL-A (S 382) - The Committee on Environment, Natural Resources and Agriculture is considering legislation that would ban the manufacturing, sale or distribution in the Bay State of toys, baby bottles and other child care articles in the state containing bisphenol-A. Supporters say 130 studies suggest that bisphenol-A exposure even at very low doses is linked to a many health problems, including prostate and breast cancer, obesity, attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD), brain damage and altered immune system.

The committee's agenda also includes a measure that would require recycling in state buildings (S 379).

TOLLS - The Transportation Committee is looking at a bill that would give the Massachusetts Department of Transportation the authority to place tolls on all major routes at the state's borders with New York, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont (S 1792).

Other measures on the committee's agenda include bills to conduct a study of the benefits and challenges of a fully-automated toll collection system on all Massachusetts toll roads (H 1786); prohibit the charging of a toll for any driver 70 years of age or older on the Mass Turnpike, Callahan Tunnel, Sumner Tunnel or the Ted Williams Tunnel (H 939); allow vehicles that do not meet the occupancy criteria of high occupancy vehicle lanes to access those lanes on Route I-93 for a fee (H 2658); and eliminate tolls on the Mass Turnpike (H 945).

Cat Dam, the Inner Little Harbor tide gates on Nichols Road.

Although the NOI application comes from the Board of Selectmen, the Environmental 20 (a group of 20 families residing in the area of Cat Dam), paid for the engineering study that is the core of the NOI application. Four of the residents who expressed interest in serving on the Conservation Commission are members of the Environmental 20 group.

Issues of the Board of Selectmen and the Conservation Commission rarely intersect, but over the past two years, the Cat Dam issue has been in front of both boards over many meetings as the NOI was developed and presented.

While Selectmen Chairman Ted Carr tried to keep conversation away from Cat Dam, he asked each of the five applicants present if they were members of Environmental 20 and if they were willing to serve as an associate member.

The three selectmen who voted in favor of the new appointments — Paul Carlson, Fred Koed and Leland Jenkins — have also agreed to changes to the NOI brought forward by the Environmental 20 group. They have also agreed to delaying public hearings at the Environmental 20 request.

Process

Two weeks ago, the Board of Selectmen reappointed all the board members with expiring terms until July 12 because some of the board members up for reappointment had not taken the required state ethics exam.

When Koed made the motion to appoint three new residents to the Conservation Commission there was a gasp in the room. One member of the audience called out, "This is unbelievable."

Jenkins quickly seconded the motion, but Selectwoman Diane Kennedy started the discussion.

"The intention two weeks ago was to pass the whole slate of reappointments subject to their taking the ethics test," Kennedy said, adding she would not support appointing different candidates and was uncomfortable with the process.

Farrag reminded selectmen that his board was in the midst of permitting the Cat Dam NOI.

"To reshuffle the deck now is not in the best interest of the Conservation Commission and not in the best interest of the town," he said. "This would be the first time (to my knowledge) the Selectmen voted to reshuffle the board when there is a permit in front of them. It would be a first in Cohasset."

Koed interrupted and asked Carr to remind speakers to keep Cat Dam out of the discussion.

Carlson said he was of two minds on the issue. On one hand, the three candidates up for reappointment were experienced, knowledgeable and offered continuity and consistency. On the other, he said new blood on boards was occasionally good and he wanted to encourage greater participation.

"It's not a simple situation," he said.

Carr said while he was appreciative of the residents who came forward to serve, he was "very cautious and nervous."

"I'm very cautioned about what precedent this sets for town government in this town," Carr said.

Jenkins said he believed the Conservation Commission should have term limits, similar to the Advisory Committee. There are no term limits in the town's bylaws for the Conservation Commission.

Koed said he has found recent meetings of the Conservation Commission to have an "adversarial procedure."

"It's time for a more collaborative relationship with all the boards. That's why I reluctantly brought this motion forward," he said, causing some members of the audience to laugh.

Carlson agreed.

"I was struck at the lack of concern for the neighbors (in recent public hearings). That bothered me," he said.

The vote to appoint Koines, Marten (a member of the Environmental 20 group) and Gilman was 3-2. Koed, Carlson and Jenkins voted in favor and Carr and Kennedy against the motion.

Reaction

Cook and Charron immediately left the room following the vote.

Cook has served on the Conservation Commission for more than 15 years and was chairwoman for several years. She also serves on the Community Preservation Committee and worked to bring the Community Preservation Act to Cohasset. She has been a longtime member of the Open Space Committee and volunteered in various other capacities over the last 35 years.

Charron moved to town about seven years ago and, as a licensed environmental engineer, sought a position on the Conservation Commission. She also served on the Community Preservation Committee and the Stormwater Committee. She helped draft the stormwater management bylaw.

Karoff was asked if he would serve as an associate member. He agreed and was appointed unanimously. Michael Milanoski, who was not present at the meeting, was appointed to fill the other associate member position.

Shortly after the vote on the Conservation Commission, selectmen voted to reappoint all the other members of other boards whose terms were expiring. None of those appointments were questioned or discussed.

On Wednesday, both Charron and Cook were still trying to make sense of what transpired.

"After having served as a volunteer on myriad town boards over the last 35 years, I was heartsick at the outcome of the meeting last night, and not by the fact that I was not reappointed, but by the process, which struck me as undemocratic and definitely not transparent," Cook stated in an email.

Charron said while selectmen have the right to appoint anyone they choose, she felt they had three experienced and dedicated Conservation Commission members before them.

"We are dedicated to upholding the Wetlands Protection Act, the town's wetlands bylaws and the stormwater management bylaw," Charron said.

Karoff said he decided to serve as an associate member because of his interest in the environment of the town, but he did not agree with how selectmen made their decision.

"I firmly believe some of the selectmen do not understand the mission and function of the Conservation Commission, which is to protect the environment and deal with water issues in this town," Karoff said. "We're not there to be a good guy or bad guy; we're there to watch out for the environment, uphold the bylaws and do right by the entire town."

Karoff has been on the Conservation Commission for one term and was previously involved in harbor issues.

"Some of the selectmen did a horrendous disservice to themselves and the town," he said. "They took off some very experienced members of the board in the midst of a ongoing permitting process. They have every right to do it, but it doesn't seem like good judgment."

Effect on Cat Dam

According to Farrag, none of the newly appointed members of the Conservation Commission will be able to vote on the pending Cat Dam NOI application.

Marten, a member of the Environmental 20 group, said he recognized he would have to recuse himself from any future discussions or decisions on Cat Dam.

Four members of the board will deliberate and vote on the permit: Farrag, Jack Creighton, Ed Graham and Veneta Roebuck.

The Conservation Commission will begin deliberation on the Cat Dam NOI application next week on Wednesday, July 20 at 7p.m. at Town Hall.

CSC Launch Party is a success

More than 150 adult members and friends of the Cohasset Sailing Club celebrated the official start of the 2011 sailing season with the club's annual lobster feast and silent auction on Saturday, July 9. This year's launch had a great vibe, aided by the presence of a high tide and the absence of bugs and humidity. Thanks to all who helped plan, set up, came, and cleaned up. Special thanks to those who donated and bid on the many auction items, the proceeds of which will go to the building fund for the new clubhouse.

CSC has raised a little more than $170K toward the $500K goal, so is a third of the way there on the Destination Home Port building campaign. If interested in helping CSC reach this final milestone, the first CSC Estate Sale will take place the weekend of Sept. 17 and 18 at the clubhouse. Since all proceeds will go toward the building fund, this is a chance to contribute by donating furniture, decorative items or other items in working condition; no clothes and toys. People are asked to give the type of items that might be left at the Boutique or gotten rid of at the now-defunct Cohasset Consignment Shop. CSC is starting to collect donations and can arrange for storage until the auction.

CSC is a 501(c) 3 not-for-profit organization, so anything donated is tax deductible. Call Diane Shipp for more information at 781-383-9198. Details on the CSC and its new clubhouse initiative can be found at www.cohassetsailingclub.org.

took a position at Collicot Elementary School in Milton in March. A search committee was formed led by Deer Hill principal Jennifer deChiara and student services director Denise Messina.

The position was offered to another candidate, but the candidate had taken a position elsewhere. Instead of going to a second choice, the position was advertised again in late May.

Bellao is already meeting teachers, staff and parents. The extended school year programs began this week and physical education teacher Kevin Dykas is conducting his sports and activity camp, so Osgood is still full of action even in the summer months.

Curriculum coordinator role filled

A familiar face in the Cohasset school system will fill the role of curriculum and professional development coordinator. Louise Demas, the current program supervisor for Humanities (English and history), will assume the role that has been without a full-time person for more than a year.

Former curriculum director Nancy Mrzyglod retired last year, but served in a limited role under contract during the past school year.

NAME: Tim Gibson
SCHOOL: Rockland
YEAR: Senior
EVENT: 100m dash
STATS: Said coach Craig Johnson: "I was thrilled to see him come back and be so successful after having ACL surgery on his knee. Tim dropped his time in the 100-meter from 11.45 as a sophomore to 11.16 this year, making him the Division 4 runner-up in the event. Tim was also able to return to the 4x100 relay team and run a great second leg for our Division 4 meet record relay team.

SCHOOL: Rockland
YEAR: Senior
EVENT: 200m dash
STATS: Said Coach Johnson: "Ian Peuser: Ian surprised many people this season when he beat Terrence head-to-head in the 100- and 200-meter races during our meet against Abington, however it was not shocking to me. Ian worked hard in the weight room in the off-season, and continued on the track. Ian became Rockland's first ever New England Champion, and picked up a Division 4 and All-State title in the process. He also anchored our Division 4 meet record 4x100 meter relay team."

LITTLE LEAGUE

Williamsport team advances

Cohasset wins way to District Semi-Final

Extra innings. Bottom of seventh, two outs, runners on second and third. Norwell and Cohasset tied at 4. Joe Cavanaro strides to the plate...and delivers! A walk off single into left, and Cohasset's Williamsport team continued its amazing run through the District 8 playoffs with a seven inning 5-4 win on Tuesday night!

It was an instant classic, and a true team effort. A tremendous pitching performance by Owen Gideon-Murphy, as he shut down a Norwell attack that had plated 3 runs in the first for an early lead.

Ben Rice, hit a huge grand slam home run in the second, as Cohasset jumped back on top 4-3.

Stellar defense was played by Will Greer and Liam O'Connell in the infield, as each recorded four clutch put outs to extinguish Norwell rallies. Sam Montgomery had a big defensive play in the top of the seventh, snaring a hard liner at first. Tim Chase, Michael Cohen, Cole Joslin, and Tommy Carrabes had big at bats, drawing hard earned walks, and driving up pitch counts. What a win, what a team!

The win followed the team's sweep of pool play.

It began with a 8-1 win over Hingham American, keyed by the pitching of Gideon-Murphy and a home run by Michael Cohen and two run double by Ben Rice.

Game two saw Cohasset beat Avon/Holbrook 12-4, with home runs from Owen Gideon-Murphy (2), Liam O'Connell and Ben Rice. In game three, Cohasset bested Abington 14-0 behind a combined one-hitter by Gideon-Murphy and Tim Chase, and Michael Cohen's dinger. Chase and Rice spun another gem in game four, as the duo combined on another one-hit shutout in Cohasset's 8-0 win over rival Scituate.

After pool play, Cohasset had earned a top seed with a 4-0 record, as it outscored its opponents 42-5.

AMERICAN LEGION BASEBALL

Full roster means good things

Post 118 wins playoff series

By Mark Ducharme
Gate House News Service

Cohasset American Legion general manager Scott Arnold knows that if his team holds a full house then some good things will happen.

Post 118 at times during the season has played games with just 10 players on the roster due to Cohasset's success in winning the Div. 4 high school state tournament and the players that were away to work on am public service trip to Kentucky to build houses.

"We had about six games where we had our full roster," said Arnold. "When we had our complete roster we won three games by 20 runs. We have great pitching and hitting on this team."

One of those wins was a 27-0 win over Jamaica Plain at home.

Jeff Cavanaro had five hits and multiple other players added four in the win for Cohasset.

The original goal for the team according to Arnold was to win the Zone 6 East title for the first time. However, without having a full team for the year, Post 118 is in the best of three Zone 6 playoffs this week and they are looking to make some things happen with a full roster.

"When we have all 18 players," said Arnold. "We can play with anybody. We want to be evenly matched when we are in the playoffs."

Historic visit

Stanley Cup makes stop on South Shore

By Ryan Wood
Correspondent

People waited in line for hours in the sweltering heat outside of Sports and Physical Therapy Associates Monday afternoon in Norwell, not to get a chance to meet a sports icon or hero, but to get a glimpse of, and in some cases kiss and hug, a piece of hardware that doesn't come around too often.

Hingham native and Hanover resident Scott Waugh, a physical therapist for the Boston Bruins, had the chance to bring the Stanley Cup to the South Shore. And he brought it to his own backyard.

"For me, growing up in Hingham and now living in Hanover, it was important for me to bring it to the South Shore because this is the only chance it has to be on the South Shore," Waugh said. "All these kids now have a chance to see it, to touch it. This team has an amazing history with so many passionate fans. And now, thousands of people experience what we got to experience to a degree, to see it and touch it."

Prior to landing at Sports and Physical Therapy Associates (Waugh co-owns the company, which has 14 locations in Massachusetts), Waugh brought the Stanley Cup to Massachusetts General Hospital and South Shore Hospital in Weymouth. Then, the coveted trophy

Region sends best to State Amateur

PAUL HARBER

The State Amateur begins this week at Wyantenuck CC in Great Barrington with an army of standouts from our region battling for the title.

It is the premier amateur event in the state with two rounds of on-site stroke-play qualifying and then the top 64 battle it out with three days of grueling match-play.

Years ago, when our hair was black and our belt size was about 30, the ubiquitous Dick Haskell and his sidekick, the irascible Dick Crosby and a few volunteers ran the entire shebang.

Today, there is a cast of thousands, but no one works harder than the director of communications, the peripatetic Becky Blaeser, who seems to be everywhere.

She has put together a tome of intriguing facts and figures about this year's championship, which you will find here.

The defending champion is Thorny Lea GC's John Hadges of Easton.

Hadges will be looking to become the first player since Jim Salinetti – and only the eighth player in the 103-year history of the Massachusetts Amateur Championship – to win more than two Massachusetts Amateur Championship titles.

Hadges is paired with Jack Kearney, the MGA Senior Player of the Year, and Bradford Tufts for the first two rounds of stroke play.

"I had the chance to play Wyantenuck last week and found it to be a wonderful old course with many challenging and unique holes," said Hadges. "The greens have many slopes and undulations which will challenge me as well as all the players... I look forward to playing and defending this championship. It's a great course and beautiful part of the state that everyone will enjoy."

If Hadges wins, he will join an exclusive fraternity of three-time champions. The only others to win three are Ted Bishop, Jesse Guilford, Jim McDermott, Jim Salinetti, Frederick Wright, Francis Ouimet and Arthur Lockwood.

One year ago at Myopia Hunt Club, Hadges outlasted Dan Head (Wellesley CC) by a score of 2 and 1 in the nearly nine-hour, 36-hole final match. The memorable day featured 11 lead changes and neither player was able to gain more than a two-hole advantage from start to finish.

Memorable feats in this event seemingly come naturally to Hadges. En route to his first Massachusetts Amateur victory in 2008 at The Kittansett Club, Hadges, 50, became the first medalist to win the title since James Driscoll accomplished that feat in 1998 at Belmont CC.

He is one of several local players who will be in the hunt.

Reigning MGA Player of the Year Brian Higgins of Franklin CC advanced to the quarterfinals last year, which was his best result at the Massachusetts Amateur Championship since his runner-up finish in 2002. Momentum could be on his side. Higgins, 36, is coming off an amateur-best T6 finish at the 2011 State Open in late June and a third-place performance at the Worcester County Amateur, an event he won in 2010.

"I feel like my game is in a good place leading up to the Amateur," said Higgins. "I have not played Wyantenuck and may not get a chance to play prior, but Mike Calef (of Brockton CC) was kind enough to sketch out a yardage book for a few of us after playing the course last week, and I'm hoping it will help guide me through my first round."

John Beadle, 15, was the 2010 Massachusetts Pre-Junior Division champion. As a beginner golfer, he took part in The First Tee of Massachusetts program and has served as an assistant instructor for hundreds of local youth at the program's home course of MGA Links at Mamantapett in Norton.

Representing Thorny Lea Golf Club this year are Steven Burak, Greg Chalas, Jim D'Ambrose, Richard Ellis, John Hadges, Ray Richard and Christopher Tarallo.

GOLFER OF THE WEEK

Herbie Aikens, Pine Hills Golf Club

Herb Aikens, 29, is one of the top threats to win the State Amateur Championship this week at Wyantenuck CC in Great Barrington.

He is off to a great start.

Aikens and Ryan Riley of Norton won their third consecutive State Four-Ball Championship.

He qualified for the US Amateur Public Links in Oregon, and advanced to the Round of 16. It marked the first time in his career that he qualified for Match Play at a USGA Championship Proper.

"I went out to the USAPL with confidence and left with 100 times more," said Aikens. "I played with the medalist and eventual champion for two days and also ran up against some great players. The one thing I learned is I can play with them and can't wait for the opportunity again."

Over the past few years, Aikens has been committed to preparing his game for national opportunities like the one he enjoyed last month at Bandon Dunes Golf Resort. In fact, on several occasions over the past few years Aikens has traveled to the David Leadbetter Golf Academy in Orlando, Fla., in order to fine-tune his game so that he can compete with the best here in Massachusetts and beyond.

"When I first started playing in the MGA events I was very nervous," said Aikens. "I would see a legend like Frank Vana and in my head would give myself no chance. But this year my mindset has changed. I know that if I play my game I can hold my own. And if I putt well I feel like I can play on just about any level. I guess for the first time I am comfortable and confident on the state and national level. The Mass Amateur is a tournament with many great players and I want to focus on getting into match play and then taking it one match at a time. Anything can happen."

What You Might Not Know: Aikens started his own electrical business nine years ago. His first project to do a single electrical outlet was for $267. Now his company does more than $8 million in business annually and employs 30 people. An avid Celtics fan, he's had floor seats for home games the last five years. He is also 6 feet, 6 inches tall.

Ryan Riley of Norton CC is known for changing his putter more often than he can remember. Through the years, Riley, 30, has tried everything from a short putter with a claw grip, a belly putter with a claw grip, a short putter with a traditional grip, and a short putter with a cross-handed grip. In fact, Riley brought two putters to the Massachusetts Amateur Public Links Championship in 2008 because he wasn't sure which one he would use for that event. Whatever he selected was magic as he captured that title – his first of what would be four MGA titles – with a score of 13-under par 129. Not much has changed lately. En route to his second-place finish at the 2011 Worcester County Amateur, Riley switched from his belly putter (which he used during day one) to a regular-sized putter and a cross-handed grip.

the Zone 6 Playoffs according to Arnold was in 1995, but Post 118 was defeated by perennial power Sandwich in the south sectionals of the State Tournament.

That changed with their series against Medfield this week.

They felt that they have a good matchup in the best of three Zone 6 playoffs this year with their third-place finish. Cohasset faced Medfield in the best of three Zone 6 playoffs with the winner of the series moving onto the south sectional in the State Tournament. They started the best of three series Tuesday at 5 p.m. at Cohasset.

Cohasset won the opener in dramatic fashion, with Cooper Davis hitting a two-run single with bases loaded in the bottom of the seventh inning for a come-from-behind walkoff 5-4 victory.

Davis came in off the bench to replace Shane Haggerty, who had been ejected on a controversial issue with a bat ruled illegal.

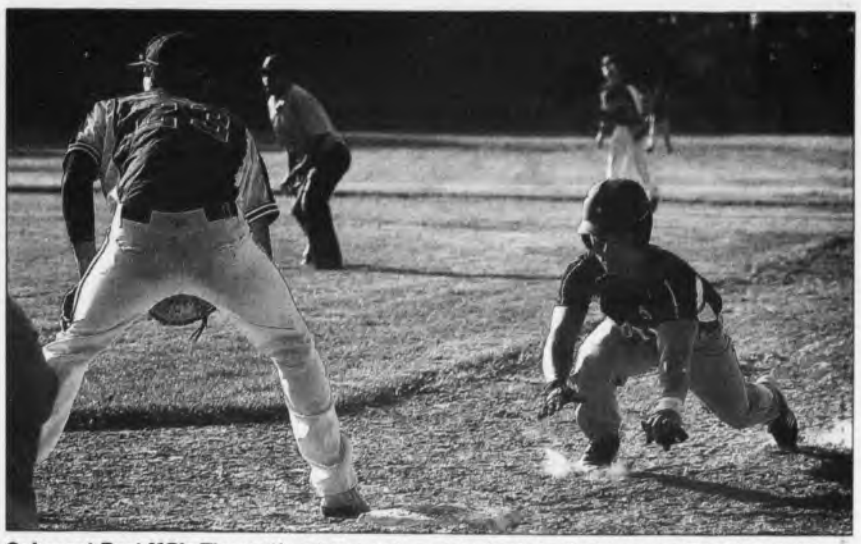
"I don't know what to say," Arnold said. "The boys battled back. They never gave up. Cooper gets extra applause, coming off the bench cold. And coach (Greg) Taylor gets some for sending the runner (Jeff Cavanaro, who scored from second with the winning run)."

Cohasset Post 118 hurler Chase Michaud, who played for Scituate High School in the spring, delivers during Post 118's 5-4 playoff win over Medfield on Tuesday.

Chase Michaud pitched a complete game in the win.

The teams met again Wednesday in Medfield, and Cohasset punched its ticked to the next round with a 2-0 win on the road.

Post 118 officially earned third-place with an 18-4 win at Jamaica Plain to end the season, while Milton, which was the only team that could nose Cohasset out of third lost to Morrissette 1-0.



"They have the same record as we do," said Arnold.

There are some key first year players for Post 118 in the series according to Arnold. He feels that these players have been key to the team's success.

There is shortstop David Podurgiel, who was one of the key players in Scituate High's tournament run this year as well as pitcher Chase Michaud. During the season, Michaud, who finished 3-1, had a win over Morrissette.

"Chase pitched lights out in the Morrissette game," said Arnold. "I had never heard of him and he sent me an e-mail before the season. I asked about him and we took him on the team without having seen him try out."

"David Podrugiel has been our cleanup hitter through out the season. He is hitting about .600 this year and missed the six games with the trip to Kentucky."

Cohasset Post 118's Timmy Kensinger gets safely back to first base on Tuesday night.

Catcher Conor Goetz, who was a starter at Cohasset has also made an impact in his first year with the team.

"We had not had much success in our history with Braintree," Arnold said. "We needed someone to pitch our game in Braintree and Conor stepped up and said that he pitched before. He threw a wicked curve ball and was ahead in the count for most of the night and beat them 8-2."

Cohasset, which will look to righthander Casey Burns as well as Michaud and Goetz on the mound got a strong performance from him in his final regular season start.

Burns shut out Stoughton 4-0 at home as Post 118 broke through offensively in the late innings after losing an 11-1 decision to Morrissette.

"Donnie Murray," said Arnold. "the Morrissette pitcher that is going to Holy Cross had a no-hitter going until Richie Roach plunked a single to right in the sixth. We have to work a little bit on our hitting against quality pitchers."

STANLEY CUP

made its way to Norwell, much to the delight of hundreds of fans, some who came from all over Massachusetts to see a piece of history.

The awe of seeing the Stanley Cup even resonated with local professional athletes, including members of the Boston Cannons of Major League Lacrosse and the Boston Blazers of the National Lacrosse League. Marshfield's Sean Morris, a member of both professional lacrosse teams, was in the area working his annual summer lacrosse camp when he heard that the Stanley Cup was nearby.

"It's great. We were at a local camp in town, and Al Blaisdell (of Sports and Physical Therapy Associates) called us up," Morris said. "It's fun to touch the cup. It's amazing so see it here."

Morris knows all about what it's like playing in the City of Champions, and he's also had experience with a championship of his own. As coach and director of the Laxachusetts, his team recently won a national championship in New Jersey.

As a player, Morris made a name for himself first at Marshfield High School, where he holds the school records in goals and assists, and then at the University of Massachusetts Amherst, where he was an All-American.

"Hopefully the Cannons can have a championship banner one day," he said. "It motivates you to win a championship in pro sports. It was great to see the city support the team."

The Stanley Cup sat on a white pedestal in front of a signed 2011 Boston Bruins Stanley Cup championship banner inside Sports and Physical Therapy Associates. Fans came in, some as young as four weeks old, to get a glimpse of history. They had their pictures taken, some standing next to the Cup, others hugging it like they were reunited with a long lost relative. Practically everyone in line had some sort of Bruins gear on – from game jerseys to Stanley Cup champion T-shirts and baseball caps.

Waugh stood and smiled, watching people get to experience what he did back on June 15 in Vancouver. Waugh, who has been with the Bruins organization for 12 years, was on the bench throughout the playoffs and even got to go onto the ice and hoist the Stanley Cup after the Bruins defeated the Canucks, 3-0, in Game 7 of the Stanley Cup finals. Bruins defenseman Zdeno Chara handed the Cup to Waugh on the ice.

"He said, 'Thanks. You helped us win this,'" Waugh said. "In other sports, the goal is to win a championship and win a ring. In hockey, you don't talk about a championship and ring. Everybody talks about one thing – winning the Cup. That's how powerful it is."

This isn't Waugh's first major championship. As part of the Boston Red Sox medical staff in 2004, he won a World Series ring. Red Sox owner John Henry called Waugh and asked him to join the Sox that season to help Trot Nixon come back from injury. Henry then asked Waugh to remain with the team the rest of the season.

Waugh played football and baseball at Hingham High School, graduating in 1986. He then went to the University of Lowell and graduated with a degree in physical therapy. He has worked with the Atlanta Falcons in the National Football League and with the Boston College football and basketball teams.

"Sports is my passion," Waugh said. "And sports medicine has been my avenue to play a role at the professional level."

Doo Wop show back at Music Circus

Sha Na Na bandmates reunite for show

By R. Scott Reedy
Correspondent

When Jon Bauman brings his "Bowzer's Original Doo Wop Party" to the Cape Cod Melody Tent in Hyannis on Friday and the South Shore Music Circus on Saturday, he will be joined by his old friends and former band mates Lennie Baker and Johnny Contardo for mini-Sha Na Na reunions – three decades in the making.

"I've done shows with Lennie, and with Johnny, over the years, but the last time all three of us worked together was in 1983," explained Bauman by telephone from his home in southern California last week. "Johnny and Lennie worked very hard and were both big parts of the success of Sha Na Na, so it will be great to see them together again."

Baker, who grew up in Whitman and now makes his home in Halifax, joined Sha Na Na in 1970 as did Bauman. The Brookline-born Johnny "Kid" Contardo, now 59, joined the band as a vocalist in 1971. All three remained with the group through its television heyday, 1977 to 1981, and memorable appearance as Johnny Casino and the Gamblers in the 1978 movie musical version of "Grease." Bauman and Contardo exited in 1983, while Baker remained a Sha Na Na saxophonist and vocalist until retiring in 1999. These days, the 65-year-old is semi-retired, returning to the spotlight only when coaxed there by Bauman.

"Lennie Baker is one of my closest friends from Sha Na Na and one of the funniest men alive. Probably 95 percent of the best Sha Na Na stories you'll ever hear involve Lennie. He is also godfather to my daughter, Nora. The feeling is just amazing when Lennie and I work together. And I always enjoy working with Johnny, too. He still sounds terrific. Lennie, Johnny, and I never did that much together, except for 'In the Still of the Night,' which we'll probably do again at these shows. We may also do 'Lovers Never Say Goodbye.' Being back together with Lennie and Johnny will be great. We're all much older and wiser now than the first time around."

With Bauman, 64, as master of ceremonies and performer with the Stingrays, this week's line-ups will also feature some of the biggest hitmakers of the Doo Wop era, including Herb Reed and The Platters ("Only You," "The Great Pretender," "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes"), Little Peggy March ("I Will Follow Him"), Gene Chandler ("The Duke of Earl") and The Tune Weavers ("Happy, Happy Birthday, Baby").

"I love producing these DooWop shows, because they feature the original artists who did all the great music that Sha Na Na covered. The Platters were one of the biggest groups of the Doo Wop era and Herb Reed is their only surviving original member so it is always a treat to work with them. Gene Chandler is a great showman. His performances on the PBS-TV Doo Wop specials always generate tremendous attention. And Peggy March is terrific, too. By any standard or style of music, Peggy is a very talented singer. Having Gene Chandler and Peggy March on the same bill is something that always thrills our audiences. I have wanted to work with the Tune Weavers for a very long time so I am glad they'll also be joining us. One of their founding members, John Sylvia, lives in Marion."

The artists who'll come together this week do so under their original group names, thanks in part to Bauman's work on Truth in Music efforts nationwide. When Bauman — who created the character of muscle shirt-wearing but muscle-less greaser "Bowzer" when he replaced Alan Cooper as bass singer for Sha Na Na — isn't touring with The Stingrays, he is traveling the country lobbying politicians on behalf of the Truth in Music committee he chairs in the Vocal Group Hall of Fame. With Bauman's leadership, Truth in Music bills — protecting artists from identity theft and consumers from deception and fraud — have been passed in many states, including Massachusetts where the legislation was championed by State Senators Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) and Marc R. Pacheco (D-Taunton).

Stanley Cup makes surprise hospital visit

Trophy cheered by South Shore patients and staff

By Ed Baker
ebaker@wickedlocal.com

The Stanley Cup made the rounds at South Shore Hospital July 11 to the delight of patients and staff who had no superstitions about touching hockey's holy grail.

Passions about the Boston Bruins Stanley Cup championship victory over the Vancouver Canucks in the nail-biting seven-game playoff series last month seemed quite fresh for the patients and employees who were awestruck by the 33-pound silver trophy.

"It deserves to be in Boston, and it will stay here because the Bruins are the best and toughest team to go all the way," said Jack McCormack, a 2011 Boston College High School graduate as he clutched the Cup in his hospital bed. "Tim Thomas, (Bruins goalie) deserved the MVP of the playoffs."

McCormack said the Cup is exceptionally big.

"It is probably the best trophy there is," McCormack said.

The Cup was brought into nearly a dozen rooms by Bruins trainer Scott Waugh into the hospital pediatric unit and orthopedic section.

"I've seen some great trophies before, but this is the best. The Bruins deserve to have it. I can't believe I touched the Stanley Cup."
Robert Catyb,
South Shore Hospital patient

"Every player and member of the team is allowed to have the Stanley Cup for one day," said Lynn Cornelius, marketing director for South Shore Hospital.

An entourage of employees followed Waugh and snapped camera shutters as he wheeled the Cup on a cart down the hallway.

The Cup was big enough for one-week-old Jaden Sandler to lay inside its bowl to the amusement of his parents, Anthony and Weatherly of Brockton.

"He has got an autographed hockey stick signed by the Bruins players," Wetherly said.

The silver's visit was a welcome wedding anniversary gift for Joy Nash of Cohasset.

"It's my 13th wedding anniversary, I'm in the hospital, but I got to see the Stanley Cup," Nash said as Waugh placed the trophy on her bed.

"What a treat, having the Stanley Cup for desert," exclaimed Nash's roommate Ann Pinkham of Hull who had just finished eating her lunch.

Rita McSweeney of Weymouth said she hopes the Cup would make her get better soon after Waugh placed the trophy beside her.

"It is absolutely unbelievable," McSweeney's daughter Karen Hunter said. "I was in the cafeteria and I heard it (Cup) was coming and I hurried back."

The Cup's presence left Robert Catyb awestruck when Waugh placed it on his bed.

"This is fantastic," said Catyb after he touched the trophy. "I can't believe it. I've seen some great trophies before, but this is the best. The Bruins deserve to have it. I can't believe I touched the Stanley Cup."

The trophy's visit was a welcome treat.

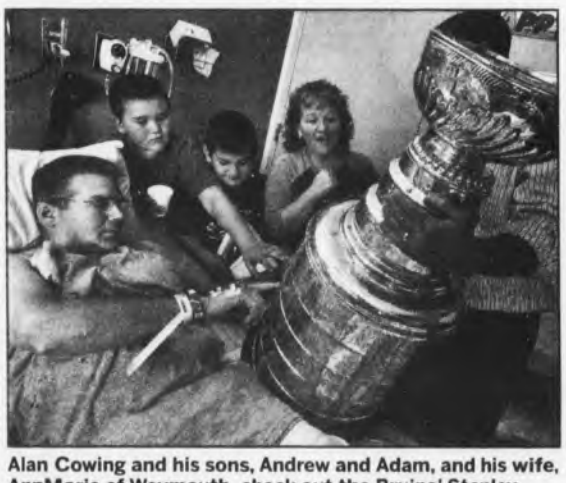
Alan Cowing of Weymouth as he lay in his hospital bed while he enjoyed a visit with his wife AnnMarie and their children Alan, 15; Andrew, 12; and Adam 8.

"It is unbelievable to see it in person," Andrew said.

Ann Marie said the National Hockey League and the Bruins in particular have made the Stanley Cup "the people's trophy," because fans are allowed to touch it.

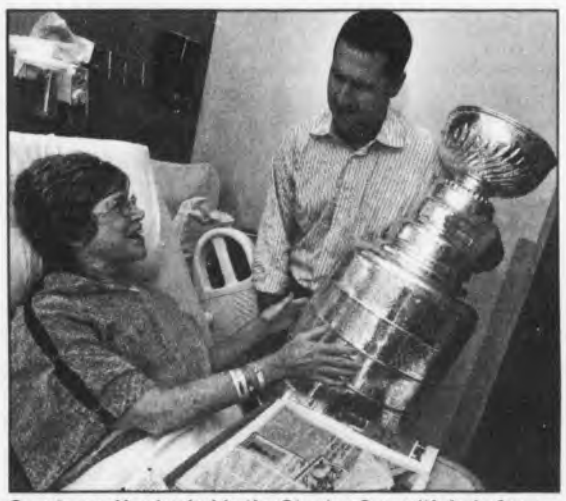
"Zdeno Chara (Bruins defenseman) made the Stanley Cup the people's trophy when he got off the duck boat during the (championship) parade and he allowed people to touch it," Cowing said. "You don't see that happen in other sports. When the World Series trophy was displayed at Fenway, there was rope set up around it and people could not touch it."

Cowing said the Bruins players are down-to-earth and seem like common people in comparison to other professional athletes.



"They are people who kids can look up to," Cowing said. "They are pros yet they are real persons."

The Cup's visit at South Shore Hospital was among several stops that Waugh, a Hanover resident, brought the trophy to on July 11.



Waugh brought the trophy to Massachusetts General Hospital for patients and staff to admire in the morning and he displayed the trophy at the Sports and Physical Therapy Associates in Norwell later in the afternoon.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Confront the person who caused your hurt feelings and demand a full explanation for his or her actions. You'll not only recover your self-esteem, but you'll also gain the respect of others.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) That personal problem in the workplace is compounded by someone's biased interference. Stand your ground, and you'll soon find allies gathering around you.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) You don't accept disapproval easily. But instead of hiding out in your den to lick your wounded pride, turn the criticism into a valuable lesson for future use.

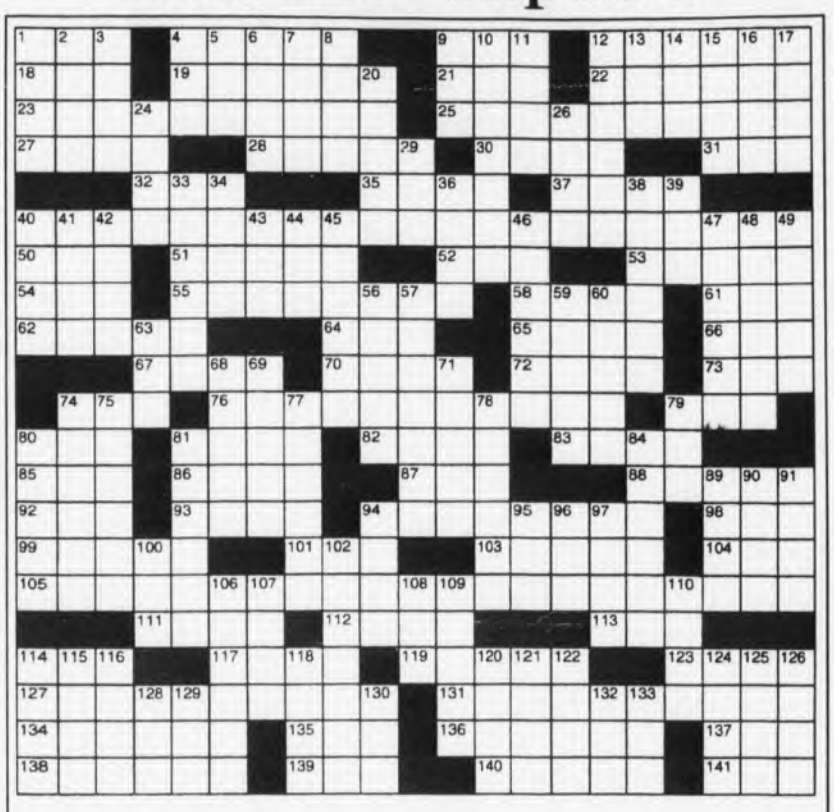
VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) That former friend you thought you'd cut out of your life is still affecting other relationships. Counter his or her lies with the truth. Your friends are ready to listen.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) What appears to be an unfair situation might simply be the result of a misunderstanding. If you feel something is out of balance, by all means, correct it.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) A stalled relationship won't budge until you make the first move. Your partner offers a surprising explanation about what got it mired down in the first place.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) A co-worker shares some startling news, but before you can use it to your advantage, make sure it's true. The weekend favors family matters.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Your usual conservative approach to family situations might not work at this time. Keep an open mind about developments, and you might be pleasantly surprised.



AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Plans might have to be put on hold because of a family member's problems. Don't hesitate to get involved. Your help could make all the difference.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Relationships in the home and in the workplace need your careful attention during this period. Be careful not to allow misunderstandings to create problems.

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

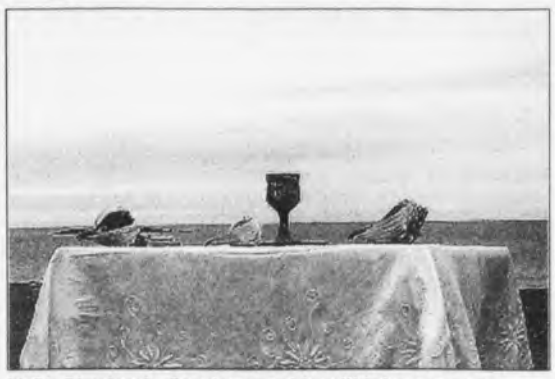
WORSHIP

Summer at St. Stephen's: Relaxed, refreshing, and reverent

By The Rev. Margot Critchfield
Special to the Mariner



"Come to me, all you that are weary and are heavy burdened, and I will give you rest..." Matthew 11:28

This gentle invitation from Jesus greets us every week: it is painted in beautiful gold lettering across the apse in our sanctuary. I'm not certain why our church's founders chose that particular piece of scripture, but I suspect it had to do with the fact that they were mostly city dwellers for whom Cohasset was a summer community — the place where they came to get away from it all — to leave their burdens behind, to restore their weary souls, and to rest in the remarkable beauty of this rocky little corner of God's creation.

Yet our founders must have realized that without a church community with whom they could share worship, break bread, and hear God's word, something was missing. They must have realized that it takes more than sand, surf, sunshine and sailing to replenish and restore them deep down where it counts and makes a lasting difference.

So wherever you are this summer, whether in Cohasset or out of town on holiday, I hope you will put, "Go to church" on top of your "How-I-Will-Spend-My-Summer-Vacation" list. There you will find authentic rest for your weary souls and meet the One who promises to make your burdens light.

Here at St Stephen's, our Sunday worship will take on a more relaxed yet reverent feel as we Break Bread with Jesus on the Beach at 7 a.m. — joined by vacationers, regular worshippers, kids in pajamas, even well-behaved pets. At 9 a.m. we'll have Eucharist at the church with a simpler and more intimate altar arrangement for the summer, and a more contemporary liturgy designed by the Episcopal Church's Standing Commission on Liturgy and Music. I hope you'll join us and relax in the rhythm of this summertime service of prayer, worship, and Holy Communion.

At St. Stephen's, Sunday worship will take on a more relaxed feel as parishioners Break Bread with Jesus on the Beach at 7 a.m. COURTESY PHOTO

But wherever you are, always remember that God doesn't take a vacation, and neither does God's church. If you're looking for someplace to leave your burdens behind and restore your weary souls deep down where it counts, Jesus' gentle invitation is always open: "Come to me, all you that are weary and are heavy burdened, and I will give you rest..."

The Rev. Margot Critchfield is Rector of St. Stephen's in Cohasset.

Carillon recitals every Sunday

The Cohasset Carillon is the largest carillon by number of bells (57) in New England and can also claim the oldest continuing annual recital series in North America. In 1925, one year after the installation of the first set of bells (23), President Calvin Coolidge and his wife Grace stood on Cohasset Common, listening to Kamiel Lefevere play a program of popular songs, including "Annie Laurie."

The 87th annual Summer Recital Series continues each Sunday until August 14 at 6 p.m.

- July 17: Monika Kazmierczak (Poland)
- July 24: Mary Kennedy (Cohasset)
- July 31: Gordon Slater (Canada)
- Aug 7: Lee Cobb (Lake Wales, Fla.)
- Aug 14: Jonathan Lehrer (Cambridge, Mass.)

Cohasset Common, in the center of town, is one of the best listening places. Parking is ample and free. Bring your lawn chairs or a blanket along with a picnic supper to enjoy on the Common while the bells are ringing. After each recital, a brief tour of the tower is offered for those interested in seeing the instrument in the playing cabinet and the bells in the tower above.

William G. Russell, Jr.

CABOT, VT – William Goodwin (Bill) Russell, Jr. ,81, former longtime resident of Cabot, Vermont, passed away July 12, 2011 at Fletcher Allen Health Care in Burlington surrounded by his children.

Born in Dearborn, MI on April 25, 1930, he was the son of William G. and Grace (Frampton) Russell, Sr. The family moved to Cohasset, Massachusetts, when he was ten years old. He was among the last high school class to graduate from Derby Academy in Hingham, MA, where his father taught English and Latin. He later graduated from the University of Vermont in Burlington.

As a young man, Bill was an avid outdoorsman. Starting in his early teens, he spent a decade of summers at Camp Wabun based in Temagami, Ontario. He began as a camper and then became an instructor. The focus of the camp was extended canoe trips in the tradition of the early fur trappers. The most experienced campers, of which Bill became one, was a summer-long journey to James Bay above the Artic Circle.

It was a desire to learn to ski that first brought Bill to Vermont in the 1960's. While working in local restaurants in Warren, he spent his spare time practicing on the notorious slopes of Mad River Glen. He also enjoyed woodworking and reading.

A dedicated teacher, Bill taught for more than forty years in Vermont and in Massachusetts. Early positions included English and Latin in Williamstown, Massachusetts and Winooski, Vermont. For eighteen years, he taught sixth grade at Berlin Elementary from which he retired in 1990.

In 1972, he moved with his young family to the village of Cabot, Vermont, where he lived for twenty-eight years. While in Cabot he served for a period of time as an EMT for Cabot Volunteer Ambulance Service and taught EMT training classes in the evenings. After moving from Cabot, Bill lived in Montpelier for ten years. For his last year, he lived at Heaton Woods in Montpelier.

Survivors include, his older sister Grace Tuckerman of Cohasset, MA, his former wife Marko Russell of Montpelier, VT; two sons, William Russell III and his wife, Sally and their children Alec, Maya and August of Weymouth, MA, Michael Russell and his wife, Tammy and their sons Samuel and Eli of Plainfield, VT, two daughters, Heather Fine and her husband, Matthew and their sons Adam and Evan of Wynnewood, PA and Michelle Robertson and her husband, Christian and their son, Temple of Crested Butte, CO.

A Memorial Service will be held at the United Church of Cabot on Sunday, July 17, 2011, at 1 p.m. Interment will be held at a later date in the family plot at the Oak Grove Cemetery in Plymouth, Massachusetts.

Memorial contributions in his memory may be made to the Cabot Ambulance Service, PO Box 32, Cabot, VT 05602.

Editorial on appointments

On Monday (July 11), Selectmen received six letters of interest in one package; another one came in shortly after. The letters were brief, and nearly identical in form; all contained three paragraphs with roughly the same information. None of the letters came with a resume listing relevant experience. Despite the limited information and flurry of applicants — most Selectmen were ready to vote the very next night on the new appointments.

Doesn't it sound like there was communication behind the scenes?

COHASSET ASTRONAUT

Bowen is down to earth

Cohasset astronaut Steve Bowen enjoys his role as EVA capcom in Houston's Mission Control on July 12, 2011. Bowen assisted STS-135 astronaut Rex Walheim from the ground as Walheim talked Expedition 28 astronauts Mike Fossum and Ron Garan through their spacewalk performed during the last flight in NASA's 30-year space shuttle program. COURTESY PHOTO/NASA

Reflects on missions, hometown connection

By Jill Michaels
Correspondent

The last time we spoke with him, in March, he was flying at 17,500 mph. After months of hit-and-miss, we finally tagged up with astronaut Steve Bowen for a proper conversation.

The Cohasset native spent 40 minutes on the phone with the Cohasset Mariner last Wednesday (July 13) from his desk in the Astronaut Office building at NASA's Johnson Space Center in Houston. Bowen graciously discussed the multiple subjects on our catch-up list: his trip to Cohasset last December; his unplanned STS-133 space shuttle launch in February; his Memorial Day visit to Cohasset; his ground-based role this month in STS-135 Atlantis (the final flight of NASA's shuttle program), and his future career as an astronaut.

The conversation lasted nearly three times longer than the standard astronaut telephone interview.

Since 2011 has been quite a whirlwind year for him, Bowen joked: "What was I doing in December?"

Then the astronaut recalled talking to students during his appearances at Cohasset's three schools. Those speaking engagements were part of Bowen's hometown visit after his second shuttle flight, STS-132.

"I remember thinking: 'It's nice to be home,' " Bowen said as he reflected on that winter trip, taken just weeks before his surprise assignment to STS-133. "That [STS-133 flight] was quite unexpected. This was a different group of students than [STS-126, his first shuttle flight]. I showed them my STS-132 video, and they seemed to enjoy it.

"Little did I know that I would be flying in space two months later."

Discovery's* last flight

Between space flights, astronauts work technical assignments for NASA. In October, Bowen was assigned as the chief of the EVA (Extravehicular Activity or spacewalk) branch of the Astronaut Office.

In mid-January, after STS-133 astronaut Tim Kopra suffered a bicycle injury, the chief of the Astronaut Office, Peggy Whitson, tasked Bowen with composing a list of potential candidates to take Kopra's place as lead spacewalker aboard Discovery for that shuttle's final mission.

As EVA branch chief, Bowen felt obligated to include himself on the list, because he was qualified as a replacement. "But I told them not to pick me, because I am the one who put the list together," he laughed.

Senior Center

New committee reflects partnership

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

The Board of Selectmen has made a firmer commitment to pursuing a partnership with the Social Service League to build a new building to house the senior center.

The Social Service League of Cohasset has been in existence for almost a century. The organization has been involved in the discussion of building a new senior center since its inception and had previously pledged $1 million toward the project. Last month, the League came forward with a new proposal – to construct a building privately on the land previously targeted for the town senior center building.

"I'd like to see a broad membership group, similar to Budget Planning Group and Water Planning Group."
Selectman Paul Carlson

With the proposed change in project dynamics, Selectman Paul Carlson brought forward a request to sunset a previously formed senior center building committee and create a new committee to deal with the project issues that involve the town.

"I'd like to see a broad membership group, similar to Budget Planning Group and Water Planning Group," Carlson said. Both of those groups utilize members of other key committees (Selectmen, Advisory Committee, and Capital Budget Committee) as well as citizens-at-large and the commission most closely involved with the issue, in this case the Council on Elder Affairs.

"(This group) would work toward protecting the town's interest in this project," Carlson said. The committee would be called the Senior Center Building Group.

The issues affecting the town include the town land transaction to the Social Service League, lease terms and conditions once the building is built, and impact on the

CONSERVATION RESTRICTION By Nancy White | nwhite@wickedlocal.com

8.7 acres will be protected

What is it:
In 2005, when there was a lot of talk about what could be done on the Cook Estate property off Sohier Street, a citizen's petition came forward to Town Meeting seeking to place a conservation restriction on 8.7 acres adjacent to Peppermint Brook, a tributary to Lily Pond, the town's primary drinking water source. The article was approved with a two-thirds majority vote. It took two years for the Selectmen to vote to place the conservation restriction on the property and then the request had to get approval from the state. Last week, the Selectmen accepted and signed the conservation restriction ending a more than six-year process.

Where is the land:
The 8.7 acres is located off of Sohier Street behind the Cohasset Plaza adjacent to the currently under-construction Cook Estate property.

What does this mean:
In simplest terms, the conservation restriction requires the land to be kept in its natural state. The restriction prevents any future development and will protect the watershed in perpetuity. Passive recreation is still permissible, but the property is very wet and not easily accessible.

EXTRA IN YOUR MARINER

Who is involved:
The Cohasset Conservation Trust will be the holder of the land's conservation restriction. The Trust is a private non-profit group dedicated to land conservation and preservation in Cohasset. The town will still own the property. Having the town as the owner and titleholder and a separate entity as the holder of the conservation restriction strengthens the restriction, Trust president Debbie Shadd said. The Cohasset Conservation Trust owns about 100 acres of conservation-restricted land in Cohasset and Scituate, including Bassing Beach, Great Brewster Woods and Barnes Wildlife Sanctuary (adjacent to Wheelwright Park).

Mariner drop box at Tedeschi's

The Cohasset Mariner has a "drop box" and pickup location at Tedeschi's in the village. The drop box is on the counter in the front window around the corner to the left after you enter the front door.

The Mariner picks up at 8 a.m. on Mondays and Tuesdays. The drop box can be used to drop off glossy photographs, letters, flyers or other editorial copy.

Resignation from CPC

Waal resigns because of ConCom appointments

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

One resignation has come in the wake of last week's Board of Selectmen controversial decision to appoint three new members to the Conservation Commission.

On Wednesday (July 13), Jeff Waal, chairman of the Community Preservation Committee (CPC), resigned from his post. Waal previously served on the Conservation Commission for 15 years. He has been on the CPC since its inception in the early 2000s.

When reached last Friday, Waal said his resignation was in response to the Selectmen's decision not to reappoint members of the Conservation Commission. Last week, a majority of the Selectmen voted to appoint three new members to the Commission, instead of those up for reappointment. The Conservation Commission is in the midst of a controversial permitting process for the tide gates on Nichols Road called Cat Dam.

"I don't want to be on an appointed board and have that happen to me," Waal said. The CPC is a Selectmen-appointed board. Although Waal was not in attendance at the meeting once he heard what had happened he decided to resign.

"I decided it wasn't right," Waal said. After years of vice chairmanship on the CPC, he has assumed the role of chairman this spring.

Waal said what happened with the Selectmen appointments to the Conservation Commission could have an impact on future volunteerism in town.

"I don't want to be on an appointed board and have that happen to me."
Jeff Waal

"It certainly will give people pause, whether they are volunteering for an elected or appointed board. (Residents) volunteer for the good of the town and to offer their services and expertise in certain areas," Waal said. "(To be someone like) Debbie Cook who has been on the Conservation Commission for 20 years and to be treated that way (is not right)."

This week, Selectmen chair Ted Carr said he was saddened by the news of Waal's resignation.

"He has a long history of superb services to the town. I hope he will again serve on a board in Cohasset," Carr said. Carr, along with selectman Diane Kennedy, voted against the appointments of new Conservation Commission members Alex Koines, Jim Marten and James Gilman. (Selectmen Paul Carlson, Leland Jenkins and Fred Koed voted in favor of the appointments.)

"While I disagree with the decision to not reappoint persons on the Conservation Commission, I want people in Cohasset to know these are important positions and I hope others will be willing to serve," Carr said in a phone interview.

"I hope people will not be discouraged by the outcome of one meeting. Cohasset is a beautiful town and it is critically important to have people to serve on these boards and commissions. I encourage everyone in town to participate," Carr said.

POLICE BEAT

Parking enforcement in high gear

By Mary Ford
mford@cnc.com

Police have been busy conducting parking enforcement at Sandy Beach, Government Island, Parker Avenue and Wadleigh Park where motorists are required to have all-facility stickers to park there. The police log over the past week has been peppered with parking enforcement entries.

The all-facility stickers expired June 30 and the new ones (this year they are blue) were effective July 1.

Police said 75 percent of the parking tickets issued where stickers are required are for non-residents and about 25 percent are residents who have not obtained a new sticker.

Parking fines at Sandy Beach are $50; at the other locations the fine is $25.

The no parking sign at Government Island that was made of wood went missing last week and was replaced with a new metal one last Friday.

Dog bite

A 43-year-old Cohasset woman reported last week that her neighbor's dog bit her. The Animal Control Officer followed up and made sure the dog was up-to-date on its shots and license and it was, police said.

Mysterious device

A 35-year-old Cohasset woman who was planning to move out of her apartment in the village reported finding a strange device in her apartment last week and she thought it might be a camera, police said. She was in a dispute with her landlord over money.

Detectives took a look at the device that turned out to be a remote thermostat control/temperature sensor.

The woman has since moved out of the apartment.

MVAs

• At 1:38 p.m. on Tuesday (July 12) a 2006 Toyota Sequoia, operated by a 51-year-old Cohasset woman, who was traveling south on Border Street (from the Scituate direction) had to stop suddenly for a vehicle that was backing out of a parking space at Atlantica. She slammed on her brakes and was "rear-ended" by a 2007 Jeep Wrangler, operated by a 53-year-old Cohasset woman. Neither vehicle was towed and there were no injuries. The operator of the Jeep was cited for failure to use caution. The vehicle that backed out of the parking space has not been identified.

• At 6:02 p.m. on Tuesday (July 12), an 81-year-old Cohasset man called the station to report that a vehicle had backed into another one at Sandy Beach and left. The plate was provided and police spoke to the owner of the 2004 Lexus (which was backed into) and the owner of the 2001 Audi A4 that drove away. The driver of the Audi did not realize he had struck the other car and thought he had hit a speed bump, police said. There was no damage.

• At 10:47 a.m. on Thursday (July 14), a 2002 Dodge Ram truck, operated by a 46-year-old Humarock man, was headed south on Route 3A when it stopped at the light at Pond Street and was "rear-ended" by an 2003 Nissan Xterra, operated by a 19-year-old Scituate woman. There were no injuries; the Nissan was towed and the 19-year-old driver was cited for following too closely.

• At 12:30 p.m. on Friday (July 15), police responded to a single-car accident near 758 Jerusalem Road. Police said a 2005 Cadillac Seville, operated by a 19-year-old Hingham woman toward West Corner, went off the road and hit a pole. The operator told police she became distracted when she dropped her pocketbook on the passenger-side floor and went off the road. There were no injuries; the car was towed. The teen was cited for failure to drive in marked lanes.

Car break-in

A 55-year-old Cohasset woman reported to police last Wednesday (July 13) that her unlocked, 2000 Nissan Maxima had been entered. Missing were her cell phone and a tape recorder, police said.

Co-worker dispute

A 26-year-old Marshfield woman and a 23-year-old Weymouth woman had words at work, police said. The 26-year-old alleges the other woman poked her in the chest with her finger. Police advised the alleged victim to seek resolution through the court if she wanted to pursue the matter.

MEMA ISSUES HEAT ADVISORY

Caution urged during hot weather

EXTRA in YOUR MARINER

Advisory:
With the extremely hot weather the Commonwealth is experiencing, the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency (MEMA) is advising people to be cautious and is offering some tips to help keep cool and safe.

Saying cool:
• Slow down, avoid strenuous activity. Do not try to do too much on a hot day.
• Wear lightweight, loose-fitting, light-colored clothing. Light colors will reflect heat and sunlight and help maintain normal body temperature. Protect your face with a wide-brimmed hat.
• Drink plenty of water regularly and often, even if you do not feel thirsty. Attempt to stay hydrated.
• Limit intake of alcoholic beverages. They can actually dehydrate your body.
• Eat well-balanced, light, regular meals. Avoid high protein foods that increase metabolic heat.
• Stay indoors as much as possible.
• If you do not have air conditioning, stay on your lowest floor, out of the sun. Electric fans do not cool the air, but they do help evaporate perspiration, which cools your body.
• Go to a place where you can get relief from the heat, such as air conditioned schools, libraries, theaters and other community facilities that may offer refuge during the warmest times of the day.
• Check with your community for information about possible local 'cooling centers.' You may also want to call 2-1-1 for 'cooling center' information or go to www.mass211.org.
• Cover windows that receive morning or afternoon sun with drapes, shades, awnings or louvers.
• Outdoor awnings or louvers can reduce the heat that enters a home by up to 80 percent.
• Avoid too much sunshine. Sunburn slows the skin's ability to cool itself. If you are outside, use sunscreen lotion with a high SPF (Sun Protection Factor) rating.
• Never leave children or pets alone in a closed vehicle.
• Check on family, friends and neighbors.

Internal thermostat:
In normal weather, the body's internal thermostat produces perspiration that evaporates and cools the body. However, in extreme heat and high humidity, evaporation is slowed and the body must work extra hard to maintain normal temperature, which may lead to heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke. If you believe you, or anyone you are with, is experiencing a heat-related medical emergency, promptly call 911, and if possible, move to a cooler place.

Senior Center
Due to heat wave the Council on Aging building at 3 North Main St. has been designated as a cooling center. The COA will be available for use from noon to 9 pm on Friday for resident that may wish to take advantage of an air-conditioned room.
Should you need assistance getting to the Council on Aging, or for any other reason, please call the police or fire department for a ride to and from the Cool Center. (781-383-1212)

About MEMA:
The Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency (MEMA) is the state agency responsible for coordinating federal, state, local, voluntary and private resources during emergencies and disasters in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. MEMA provides leadership to: develop plans for effective response to all hazards, disasters or threats; train emergency personnel to protect the public; provide information to the citizenry; and assist individuals, families, businesses and communities to mitigate against, prepare for, and respond to and recover from emergencies, both natural and man made. Healthy lawns the healthy way

By Debbie Cook
Special to the Mariner

Americans spend more than $25 billion per year on lawn care, according to EPA estimates. An average one-acre lawn costs almost $700 per year to maintain, and requires about 40 hours (or a work week) to mow. More than $1 billion is spent each year to apply 67 million pounds of pesticides and herbicides on lawns. Add to those costs the 580 million gallons of gas needed to run lawn mowers (and the CO2 that is emitted), and one can quickly see that lawns are a huge consumer of money, time and chemicals.

Those statistics don't even include watering, which consumes astronomical amounts of much-need summertime water. According to the Greenscapes program of the North and South Rivers Watershed Association, summertime water use doubles in most towns, just when fish and aquatic life need it the most.

Consider this: watering one inch of water over 5,000 square feet (just 1/8 of an acre) consumes 3,120 gallons — equal to 5,905 2-liter soda bottles or one small fuel truck. Over 12 weeks you could fill a tennis court with 21 inches of water. And if you watered one-acre with one inch of water, you would consume 26,000 gallons – more than a backyard swimming pool!

And how about the chemicals we apply on our lawns? Studies have shown again and again that lawn pesticides and herbicides are bad for our health. There are a litany of ailments that have been associated with these chemicals, including learning disabilities and hyperactivity. The EPA has found that pesticides and herbicides sprayed onto our lawns can be tracked into our homes by people and pets, where they can stay imbedded in our carpets and furniture for months, increasing their concentrations and our exposure to them.

Besides the potential personal health aspects from direct exposure, many of these chemicals do not stay put. If it rains within a short time after application they migrate into our groundwater and surface waters.

In addition, the more products we apply on our lawns, the more our lawns seem to require. There is a logical reason. Lawn chemicals are equivalent to feeding our lawns fast food. Like a fast food junkie, grass grows quickly, but it's not very healthy. The quick growth takes its toll in a weaker root system, which allows pests and weeds to gain a foothold, and the cycle of reliance on chemicals instead of Mother Nature continues.

The weaker root system also causes another problem. Since the roots are much less thick and deep, they can't hold water in the soil as well. Consequently, chemically dependent lawns require much more water, upping your water bill substantially.

There are better ways to have a beautiful, healthy yard, and they really do work. It may take a while to wean our lawns off the chemical fast food fix, and give the root systems time to get healthy again, but the results are well worth the effort for so many reasons. You never have to keep your pets or kids off the grass; you have a healthy micro-ecological system; you don't need to water so much; and you have a yard that requires less care.

If you are wondering how to get started weaning your yard off its chemical dependency, check out our website www.greenscapes.org for more information. There are some simple practices that you can start right away, such as mowing your grass 3 inches high. This practice effectively crowds out many weeds. You can also leave your grass clippings on the lawn, where they quickly decompose giving you free fertilizer. You can water only when your lawn needs it by taking some simple tests, such as the shovel and walk tests, which you'll find explained on the website.

If you don't want to deal with yard care, and you'd rather hire a professional, look for someone who has been certified by NOFA (Northeast Organic Farming Association). You can find listings of professionals in your area on www.nofa.org. If you decide to go with other professionals, you can find a list of questions you can ask them to make sure they are using benign, healthy products on your lawn on the www.greenscapes.org website.

Lawns really don't need lots of watering, chemicals and money to look good. With a good, healthy soil, your grass can thrive.

For Michele, one of the greatest advances in cancer care has been the one on the South Shore.

When Michele needed treatment for breast cancer, she was thankful that she could receive world-renowned care at Dana-Farber/Brigham and Women's Cancer Center in clinical affiliation with South Shore Hospital. And she had confidence knowing that our specialists, focused on cancer, were providing the expert care she needed. But she also found something more: how important it was to be treated in a place that not only cared for her cancer, but also for her life.

"It's a place filled with hope," said Michele. And having all the integrated services she needed close to home helped her maintain a sense of normalcy through her treatments. "With two small kids, I don't know how I would have managed otherwise," she explained. "Having this level of cancer care on the South Shore — it means everything to me."

CHALLENGING HEDLUND

Schaefer enters Senate race

By Mary Jane Hanron
mjhanron@wickedlocal.com

With the 2012 election still more than a year away, Democrat Tim Schaefer of Hull has announced his candidacy for state Senate in the district encompassing Plymouth and Norfolk counties currently held by Republican Robert Hedlund of Weymouth.

Last month, Democrat Steven May, also of Hull, announced his intention to run for the seat.

"Bob Hedlund has been in office for so long, he has become entrenched in certain ways and ideas on Beacon Hill," Schaefer said. "It is time for a fresh voice to represent the people of the district."

Schaefer, 27, has lived in Boston and the South Shore area after coming to Boston from Pennsylvania to attend college. Graduating from Boston University with a degree in political science, he said he is fulfilling a passion that he had for politics and government since his youth.

"Politics has been an interest of mine as long as I can remember, " he said. "In high school, I knew it was something I wanted to do."

Schaefer is currently a manager at a LensCrafters location, and said he has experienced the ups and downs of the business world, including being laid off.

"Bob Hedlund has been in office for so long, he has become entrenched in certain ways and ideas on Beacon Hill. It is time for a fresh voice to represent the people of the district."
Tim Schaefer

Tim Schaefer

"I learned firsthand there is a stigma attached to being unemployed," he said, adding that the challenge of finding affordable health insurance at that time was a serious concern.

Schaefer's run for the Massachusetts Senate seat is his first foray in pursuit of elective office. He previously served as an intern in Democratic state Sen. Steve Tolman's office.

"I am seeing concerning trends across the country, like union rights, collective bargaining and the treatment of public employees," he said.

Believing that the budget recently signed by Gov. Deval Patrick is flawed, he said, "It is a mistake to expect public employees to pay more in copays for services and insurance."

Schaefer believes the way to solve fiscal worries in the state is to "create jobs and encourage businesses to move to the area and to reform the health care program to feature a single-payer system. We need to find the funding needed. We can cut costs elsewhere."

Civil rights are another priority for Schaefer.

"Massachusetts is a very progressive state, one of the most progressive in the nation" he said. "Bills that support gay and lesbian rights and anti-discrimination should be expanded to include those who are transgender."

The Race to the Top program should be expanded in education, Schaefer said, and he believes in increased funding for state charter schools.

Schaefer said May holds some positions with which he agrees, but May will "need to become more specific and commit to stances far more extensively than he has at this time" for him to be able to debate May or comment further on their differences.

Schaefer, who is married to his husband of four years, Robert Protulis, said his strategy is to visit the Democratic town committees in each of the towns that are part of the district.

"I want them to know who I am and why I am running," he said.

If there are multiple Democrats running for the seat, there will be a primary next September.

"I am sure those two men will have a spirited primary," Hedlund said of a possible primary race between May and Schaefer.

Meetinghouse Pond drained

By Nancy White
nwhite@wickedlocal.com

The new look of Meetinghouse Pond on the Common got wide viewing over the past few months.

The fountain flowed during the South Shore Art Festival, the pond was dedicated and attendees of the Farmers Market have peacefully enjoyed the iconic pond.

But, according to project engineer John Cavanaro, the pond still needs a little more work before it's declared finished. To complete this work, the pond needed to be drained.

Cold temperatures when the pond was substantially completed back in December prevented the contractor from achieving the necessary compaction of the clay in the pond. With dry summer weather on the horizon, Cavanaro told the Board of Selectmen he would like to drain the pond, let it dry out and recompact the clay to ensure it reaches the ideal permeability level.

The pond will be drained for roughly three or four weeks while the work is complete.

Interim town manager Jen Oram suggested some sort of signage or fencing be placed to deter kids and other residents from going near the drained pond. She was especially concerned with the large groups and children that typically flock to the Farmers Market on the common.

Cold temperatures when the pond was substantially completed back in December prevented the contractor from achieving the necessary compaction of the clay in the pond.

The Board of Selectmen approved the draining of the pond at their meeting on July 12.

The Meetinghouse Pond was renovated through the use of Community Preservation funds approved at last year's town meeting. The pond now has a wider sidewalk, with handicap accessibility, a new bottom was put in and a system to re-circulate the water was installed.

(For more on Meetinghouse Pond, see Making Tracks, page 13).

THANK YOU TO ALL THE READERS WHO VOTED FOR US AS YOUR REGIONAL FAVORITE FOR 8 YEARS IN A ROW!

What an amazing year!
Here are a few things that we are especially proud of from the past year.

Redken Hall of Fame Induction
Well, this was by far the most exciting thing that happened to us over the past year. In January, David and Buddy were called up on stage at the Redken Symposium show in Las Vegas in front of 10,000 people and were presented with the 1st ever Redken Hall of Fame award. It was a night we will never forget and we were so happy that many of our stylists were with us to share in the experience.

South Shore Hospital Cancer Care
One in three people is affected by cancer. That is why we think it is so important to support South Shore Hospital's mission to provide comprehensive cancer care on the South Shore. Our annual Benefit Day raised $20,000 this year. Our talented salon & spa staff work for an entire day for free and all money from the days services is donated to the very worthy Journey of Hope Campaign, for more info visit www.southshorehospital.org

Ellie Fund Fun
We have to admit it. Helping the Ellie Fund is FUN! As the official hair & make-up providers to this local breast cancer charity, we get to meet a lot of inspiring people and get them ready to attend all their swanky events. From breast cancer survivors and Oscar nominated actors to all the gorgeous news ladies from Ch. 5, we take pride in making these ladies sparkle at the Oscar Boston Gala and the Kelley For Ellie events. We are especially proud of our generous staff who donates their time at these events to raise even more money for this wonderful cause, helping women and families fight breast cancer. www.elliefund.org

Stay Tuned!
We have a lot of exciting things planned for Charles David Salon & Spa this year. We can't wait to share all the juicy details so "like" us on Facebook to be kept in the loop.

WILLCUTT CORNER

Updating readers on senior center

LIZA CARENS SALERNO

Through this "corner" of the Cohasset Mariner, we will share information and project milestones building on the transparency and public input that has already been an important part of the project to date.

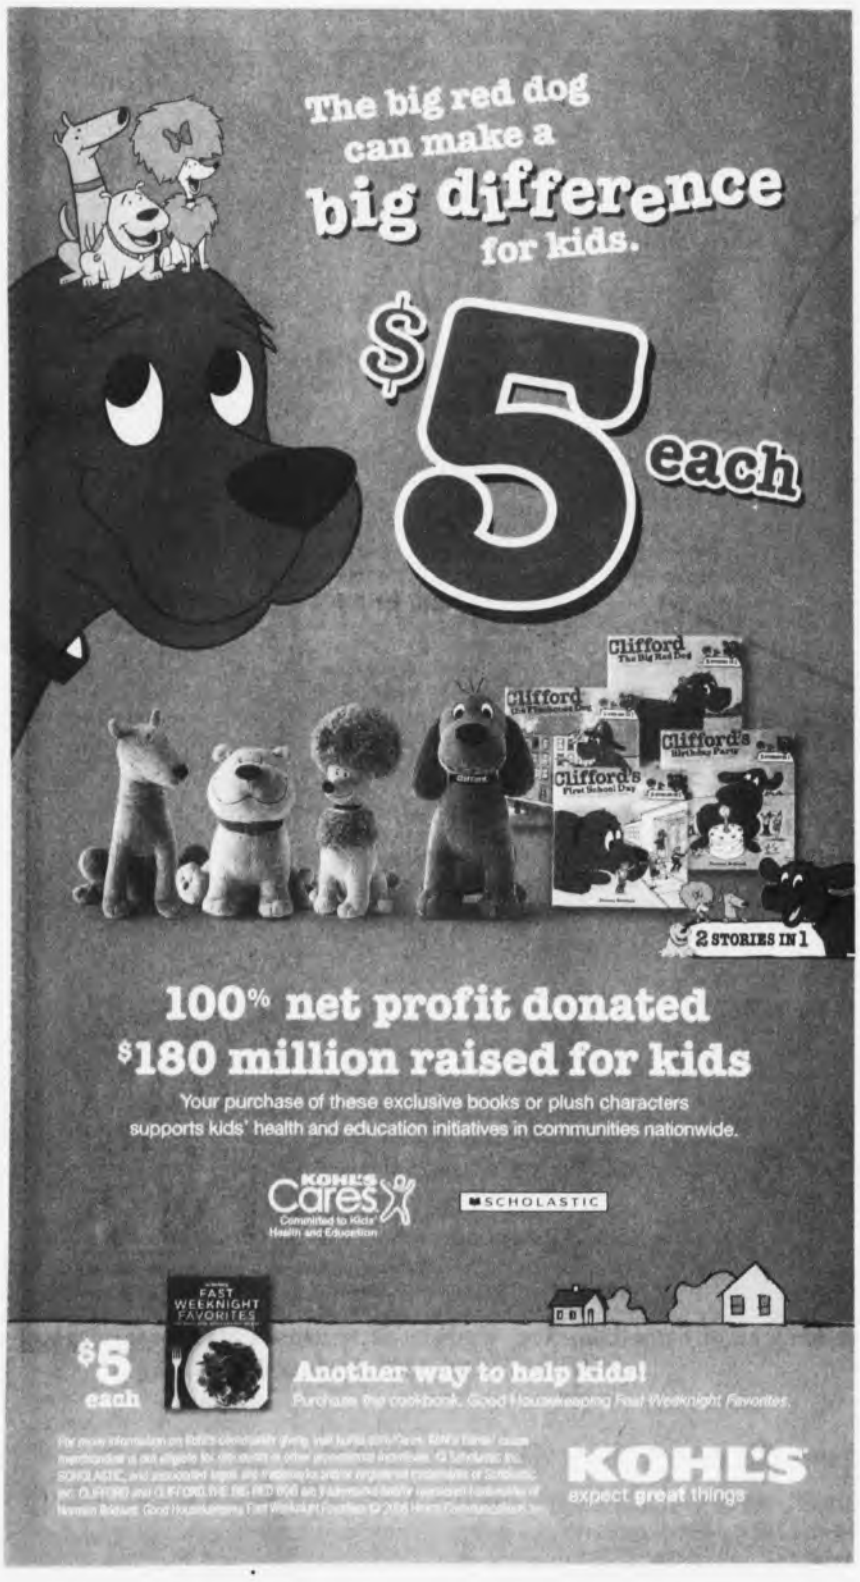
When Mary Willcutt Hooper left a sum in trust to benefit the elderly of Cohasset a century ago, she could not have imagined a Cohasset of 2011. With a thriving population of over 7,000 citizens, hosting active schedules and commuter lifestyles, townsfolk often struggle to meet and update regularly. And if her father, Levi Lincoln Willcutt were alive today, surely, like other residents of Cohasset, he would have questions pertaining to Willcutt Commons, the Senior Center planned for Sohier Street that will bear his name.

To address your questions in the coming weeks we introduce Willcutt Corner, a bi-weekly column for the Cohasset Mariner, designed to provide information relating to Cohasset Elder Affairs and the construction of Willcutt Commons. A senior center, like a new school, a library, or a community center, is an important investment for the entire community. By building a vibrant and thriving center for our seniors we are ensuring that Cohasset is committed to all of its residents.

Through this "corner" of the Cohasset Mariner, we will share information and project milestones building on the transparency and public input that has already been an important part of the project to date. Every two weeks updates will appear relating to the planning and building process, fiscal issues; the programs available at the current center as well as those planned for the new location.

A Mr. Willcutt of the nineteenth century might have met his neighbors at the blacksmith's or the feed store or in some small corner of town where communication would ensue. In the Cohasset of 2011, you need only to travel to this "corner" of the Mariner to acquire your Willcutt Commons news.

Thank you for your continued support and for working with us to build a strong and vibrant Cohasset!



Liza Carens Salerno is a freelance writer and a volunteer for Cohasset Elder Affairs.

BETH MYERS

Sunday is 'Judgment Day' on WATD

Radio show provides insight into mediation

By Sara Hollingshead
shollinghead@wickedlocal.com

For the past 13 weeks, Beth Myers has been leading discussions about a law option that many people don't understand or utilize – mediation.

"Judgment Day with Beth Myers," a program that airs Sunday afternoons on WATD 95.9FM, clarifies and explains the unique mediation process.

Mediation is a process that brings disputing parties together with a third neutral party member to settle their disagreement, without going to court.

Myers said she first got the idea for a radio show when she was trying to "solve a communications dilemma between the general public, businesses and professional mediators.

"Through training and research it became abundantly clear that there is both a desire and a need, on the part of the general public and professional mediators, to open dialogue about mediation," said Myers.

After approaching Ed Perry at WATD with her idea, "Judgment Day with Beth Myers" took off.

"Since mediation is usually about being heard and having a safe place to give yourself permission to listen, not fight, I thought about how I could reach people and businesses when and where they are ready to listen; At home or work, on the weekend, when they are relaxing with their favorite talk radio station on while they tinker in the garage, fuss about the house or garden or hang out at the beach. They can listen and learn in a safe place while the radio talks."

Beth Myers spends her Sunday afternoons discussing a unique alternative to court: meditation. COURTESY PHOTO

"We had to reach out with credibility, usefulness and a little bit of entertainment if possible."
Beth Myers

Each week, Myers has top talent guests in the legal and mediation fields on the show to discuss different aspects of law and mediation.

"Mediators talking to other mediators alone wasn't going to change the amount or quality of information that's available to the public," Myers said. "We had to reach out with credibility, usefulness and a little bit of entertainment if possible."

"Judgment Day with Beth Myers" started off with Judge Edward Ginsburg, and over the next 13 weeks, guests included the grandfather of mediation in Massachusetts, John Fiske, and renowned defense attorney, F. Lee Bailey.

In organizing the weekly show, Myers said her preparation entailed researching both her guest and topic.

"We talk two or three times before the show," said Myers. "Some speakers like me to develop a couple of questions for them to consider in advance, others prefer little preparation and we are completely ad-lib."

With a receptive audience and listeners from across the country, including California, Texas, Wisconsin, New York, New Jersey and Massachusetts, "Judgment Day with Beth Myers" will be continuing on.

"Questions and comments from listeners will demonstrate where people want the discussion to go – that's where I will focus."

Myers said she plans continuing the show with "mediation 101. Then, I'd like to raise the bar and introduce more actual case examples for people to learn from."

Listening to "Judgment Day with Beth Myers," Myers hopes her audience gets "useful information they can apply in their daily lives and business operations."

Myers, originally from Cohasset, has been a resident of the South Shore for more than 30 years. She now spends her time between Maine and Massachusetts.

Myers said she was first introduced to mediation while taking a MCLE course with Judge Edward M. Ginsburg. After receiving a certificate in Paralegal studies, working in a law firm, and "personally enduring debilitating results while navigating the Plymouth County family court system for nearly 10 years, I was looking for more in-depth, practical knowledge of how the legal system truly worked."

She turned to mediation.

"If I was going to pursue a career in the world of law, I wanted to know more about how to help others avoid nightmares similar to my own and mediation sounded like a sane alternative to litigation."

Myers currently works as a Parenting Coordinator in Massachusetts but does the majority of her mediating in Maine, where she works on small claims, landlord/tenant and property recovery matters.

CSCR Summer Program for grades four-seven

By Rhiana Fitts and Dom Brennan
Special to Mariner

Looking for a fun and educational summer program for students in grades four through seven? The Center for Student Coastal Research is proud to offer a Junior Marsh Monitors Program that enables young scientists to start early and become part of CSCR's learning community.

In fact, many of the current student leaders at CSCR started off as Junior Marsh Monitors themselves.

JMM is full of fun, hands-on activities such as simulating the natural environment of a rocky intertidal zone in fish tanks. Other activities include fish, plant and bird identification, and art projects such as fish print T-shirts.

CSCR's goal is to help every Junior Marsh Monitor gain a better understanding of the delicate balance between the salt marshes and the impact of our community. JMMs will also learn valuable skills in observation and data collection.

The program will be run in two sessions: The first two weeks of August on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings from 9 to 11:30. The price of each weekly session is $125. Students can also attend both sessions for $200.

Snacks, journals, T-shirts and other supplies will be provided.

For further information, please contact Rhiana Fitts at rhianaffitts@gmail.com, or Dom Brennan at brennandom@yahoo.com.

Carillon recitals every Sunday

The Cohasset Carillon is the largest carillon by number of bells (57) in New England and can also claim the oldest continuing annual recital series in North America. In 1925, one year after the installation of the first set of bells (23), President Calvin Coolidge and his wife Grace stood on Cohasset Common, listening to Kamiel Lefevere play a program of popular songs, including "Annie Laurie."

The 87th annual Summer Recital Series continues each Sunday until August 14 at 6 p.m.

- July 24: Mary Kennedy (Cohasset)
- July 31: Gordon Slater (Canada)
- Aug 7: Lee Cobb (Lake Wales, Fla.)
- Aug 14: Jonathan Lehrer (Cambridge, Mass.)

Cohasset Common, in the center of town, is one of the best listening places. Parking is ample and free. Bring your lawn chairs or a blanket along with a picnic supper to enjoy on the Common while the bells are ringing. After each recital, a brief tour of the tower is offered for those interested in seeing the instrument in the playing cabinet and the bells in the tower above.

'Eye of a Wandering Monk' art show and sale

Four years ago, Father Justin Edward Dzikowicz, a Benedictine monk, moved to Namibia, southern Africa, to work as a missionary. The experience inspired Father Justin to return to his artistic roots. While in Africa, he took up the paints, brushes, and camera that he's long loved, and created one-of-a-kind art that represents his African experience.

Whenever Father Justin returns to the states, Glastonbury Abbey becomes his temporary American home. This summer, he's bringing along some of his favorite works of art, including portraits, landscapes and wildlife. The public is invited to see a selection of Father Justin's paintings and photographs at the Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., on Sunday, July 24. The exhibition is free and the paintings and photographs will be for sale, with a portion of the proceeds donated to the Abbey.

Bicycling for a better world

By the Rev. Ken Read-Brown
Special to the Mariner

At the end of their long and hot ride on Sunday, these five tired riders generously agreed to have a conversation in the Old Ship Parish House, where our church was hosting them for the night.

Perhaps you saw the five orange-shirted bicyclists ride into Hingham this past Sunday afternoon. Or if you are an early riser you may have seen them at 5 a.m. Monday morning pedaling past the Hingham Harbor rotary and then heading south on Route 3A on their way to Kingston and eventually Falmouth.

Who were they? Five young women from colleges across the region riding as part of New England Climate Summer, a nine-week two-wheeled rolling internship program dedicated to, as their website (www.climate-summer.net) puts it, "addressing society's addiction to fossil fuels by crafting local solutions that strengthen communities – and building a more sustainable world."

New England Climate Summer includes 31 riders divided into five teams, three in Massachusetts, one in Connecticut/Rhode Island, and one in New Hampshire/Maine. This team of five riders had just spent several days in Chelsea, where among other projects and events they had pitched in with dozens of local volunteers who were building a new community playground. Other teams have testified at the Massachusetts State House, met with local town and city councils, worked in community gardens, and made presentations to church and community groups. The Connecticut/Rhode Island team protested at a coal-fired power plant in Bridgeport, a protest that also included a friendly meeting with the managers of the plant (after all, we are all in this together, everyone wanting a better future even though we may envision diverse ways of creating a path to that future).

Who makes up the team that rode through Hingham? Team leader Kaia Zimmerman is from Amherst, and is studying art, environmental studies and economics at Sarah Lawrence College. Outreach coordinator April Bello is from East Los Angeles, Calif., and will be a sophomore at Wellesley College, where she brings a strong interest in the intersection between environmental and social injustices. Movement narrative coordinator Sara Orvis is a senior at SUNY Potsdam originally from Clayton in upstate New York; she is majoring in environmental studies and political science. New media coordinator Lisa Purdy is from Pittsburgh; with diverse interests she is currently in her own word "undecided" when it comes to a major. And media coordinator Marina Stevenson is a rising sophomore at Brown University where she plans to major in geology-biology and anthropology; she is from Charlottesville, Va. Clearly, this is a group with diverse interests; but they are unified in their love of the natural world, their caring for human well-being, and their desire to address the crisis of global warming and climate change and create a better world.

At the end of their long and hot ride on Sunday, these five tired riders generously agreed to have a conversation in the Old Ship Parish House, where our church was hosting them for the night. And this was at a time when they might well have preferred to take a swim in Hingham Harbor or get some ice cream at Nona's or Brigham's.

When asked about their motivations for joining New England Climate Summer, their answers were varied but complementary: One said that she hoped to have a family someday, and so she was deeply concerned about the kind of world her children would be living in. Another had become aware of how ineffectively government has been responding to the climate change challenge – so she decided get involved personally and locally. Another had come to see the many ways in which climate change was an overarching issue that affected everyone on the planet – so this was where she chose to put her energy. And several noted that their passion for the issue was fired as they became more and more aware of the connections between climate change and other social issues, since it is the poor and most vulnerable who are so often the first to suffer from the more severe droughts and storms resulting from global warming, and who are also often among those suffering the most from their proximity to polluting coal-fired power plants.

Throughout our conversation, what came through most clearly and powerfully was the passion and commitment these young women have to create what one called greater "wellness" for every person and for the natural world on which we depend for our health and survival. How could one not be inspired by such young people?

I certainly was inspired as I bicycled with them for a few miles in the early morning light, and as I watched them ride their gear-laden bikes up the hill leading away from Hingham Harbor and then pedal smoothly south toward the Cape – and the future. Two members of the team were pulling 60-pound bike-trailers behind their already loaded bikes – now that's commitment from which we can all learn as we each do our part to create a path to a more sustainable future and a better world.

The Rev. Read-Brown is the minister of First Parish in Hingham (Old Ship Church), Unitarian Universalist.

OUR VIEW

Precedent setting

In a politically motivated move last week, Selectmen, in a majority (3-2) vote, essentially fired three members of the Conservation Commission over the Cat Dam permitting process.

Debbie Cook, Sarah Charron and Dick Karoff, whose terms were expiring, were not reappointed. Some will argue that these individuals were not in fact removed – they were not reappointed.

But the current editor has been covering Cohasset since March of 1992 and does not recall a time during all these years Selectmen taking this type of action against sitting members of one appointed committee.

On an annual basis, Selectmen routinely reappoint sitting members, whose terms are up and who have provided good service to various boards, committees and commissions, if those individuals are eager to continue their service. Case in point was the numerous other reappointments that Selectmen made during the same meeting last week with little discussion.

Selectmen Fred Koed, Leland Jenkins and Paul Carlson, who voted not to reappoint the three individuals to the Conservation Commission, would like us to think that need "new blood" on the Con Com was their reason. While new voices, ideas and opinions can be healthy — in this case "new blood" was a thinly veiled attempt to cover up a political agenda.

On Monday (July 11), Selectmen received six letters of interest in one package; another one came in shortly after. The letters were brief, and nearly identical in form; all contained three paragraphs with roughly the same information. None of the letters came with a resume listing relevant experience. Despite the limited information and flurry of applicants — most Selectmen were ready to vote the very next night on the new appointments. Doesn't it sound like there was communication behind the scenes?

When in the past has there been so much interest in serving on the Conservation Commission? Chairman David Farrag said there have been two open associate member positions for two years. Efforts to fill these positions through newspaper notices were unsuccessful. Selectmen could have appointed new applicants to the Conservation Commission as associate members where they could learn the ropes before becoming full-fledged members.

The Conservation Commission is one of the most important appointed boards in town – it is on par with the Zoning Board of Appeals. It is not an advisory board but has legal authority of its own. Its job is to uphold the Wetlands Protection Act, the town's wetlands bylaws and the stormwater management bylaw. Ultimately, the Conservation Commission protects the town's waterways and wetlands for the entire community. Politics have no place there.

Throughout the Cat Dam discussion, which has been going on for more than four years, there have been two neighborhood groups at odds. Both sides' arguments have merits. It is up to the Conservation Commission to decide what is best for the inner Little Harbor after taking in all the information.

Unfortunately the only transparency here is that some Selectmen – and the neighborhood group, the Environmental 20 (four of its members submitted letters of interest) – do not like the way the Cat Dam NOI is progressing before the Con Com.

Why didn't Selectmen just say so?

We are very concerned that by inserting politics into this decision, Selectmen have set a precedent that could put a damper on the type of volunteerism that this town has been so blessed to have had: qualified people willing to burn the midnight oil, year after year.

We thank Debbie Cook, Sarah Charron and Dick Karoff for their dedicated service to the Conservation Commission.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Grave disservice

A grave disservice was done not only to Sarah Charron, Debbie Cook and Dick Karoff at the July 12 meeting of the Board of Selectmen, but also to the Town of Cohasset. Dedication, experience, qualifications, and fairness were trumped by cronyism. Once again it became apparent that three (a majority) of the Town Selectmen take their orders from 20 families on Little Harbor Road and Nichols Road.

In the last issue of the Cohasset Mariner, Nancy White and Margie and Steve Brown explained the details to you, but you may ask why you should care. Because a small group of people, not those you elected, are controlling your environment and how your tax money is spent. The group has already influenced the make-up of the Board of Selectmen by circulating damaging and erroneous hate mail aimed at defeating the previous chairman. They succeeded. The E-20, as they call themselves, are people who don't want to have an artificially maintained water view, and who don't want anyone telling them what they can and can't do — not the EPA, not the DPW, not Coastal Zone Management, and not Fish and Wildlife. Each of these advisory and regulatory boards have written letters to the Cohasset Conservation Commission advising against the efforts of the group of 20 to replace the recommendations of the engineering firm you as a Cohasset citizen voted to hire.

The Board of Selectmen has also requested that the Conservation Commission decide who will pay to maintain the dam that is obstructing a natural flow of water in and out of a tidal estuary. The 20 families would also like our tax dollars to pay for that. And at least one Selectman mentioned reimbursing the group for the cost of the lawyer and engineers the group has hired to argue in favor of tidal obstruction. So, you should care. And you should be embarrassed by the disservice done to three highly qualified and experienced volunteers who have dedicated their time and brought their expertise to benefit you and your community. —Susan R. Playfair, 249 Jerusalem Road

Town's interest was well served

The following letter was sent to the Board of Selectmen with a copy provided to the Mariner.

Cohasset's interest was well served by the vote of the Board of Selectmen to replace some long-serving members of the Conservation Committee.

Although the experience of long-serving members is valuable, and should be appreciated, that value may be offset by a tendency to subjugate the real public interest to needlessly zealous interpretation (or extrapolation) of the regulations. Hence all appointed positions should be limited to two terms, but perhaps not precluded from serving another two terms after a sabbatical of three years.

Mother Nature's capriciousness causes much distress to the environment and to life, so humankind should have no compunction about ameliorating the distress, for example by emulating to some degree her more fortunate estuaries.

Inner Little Harbor (ILH) was shortchanged by having a bottom elevation relative to mean sea level that permits almost total evacuation and resultant long exposure of the mud flats for the duration of low tide periods.

This deficiency permits release of large quantities of the objectionable hydrogen sulfide that is produced by anaerobic bacteria in the sediment. This deficiency has been greatly ameliorated by using the Cat Dam gates (installed in 1957) to emulate the estuaries, which retain water cover over their bottoms even at low tide, so as to absorb much of hydrogen sulfide gas. Although this advantage is attained only by accepting the disadvantage of decreased aggressiveness of tidal flushing, this rational compromise has demonstrably reduced the odor production, probably with considerable improvement in harbor health,

The minor adjustments described in the second NOI would further enhance the environmental benefits of Cat Dam. On the other hand, Cohasset would be ill-served by a "return to natural" favored by the State agencies and perhaps by some members or former members of the Conservation Commission. —R. M. Campbell, 217 Jerusalem Road

Sad night for Cohasset

The following letter was sent to the Chairman and Members of the Board of Selectmen with a copy provided to the Mariner.

The action taken by the BOS (July 12) to appoint three new members to the Conservation Commission in place of three dedicated, experienced volunteers, is an affront to every Cohasset resident who serves on a committee. The Conservation Commission, perhaps more than any other committee, requires a depth of knowledge and experience in implementing very specific rules and regulations. The three members who were not reappointed have decades of experience. They are part of a committee that has been effective and diligent in protecting Cohasset. They have deliberated and rendered unbiased decisions on some very controversial applications.

Balancing a committee to retain its impartiality should be a concern of the appointing authority. Replacing these three incumbents with three appointees, all with the same agenda, shows a lack of leadership on the part of the BOS. Rather than retaining an unbiased committee, the BOS have now shifted the balance to one special interest group. Not only was it a slap in the face to these dedicated volunteers, it was a punch in the stomach to every Cohasset citizen serving on a committee.

The BOS has sent a message to every committee member: Your time, experience, and hard work are not appreciated or valued in any way. In a time when it is difficult to find new volunteers to serve on committees, this is yet another reason to stay away. The July 12th meeting was a very sad night for the residents of Cohasset. —Ellie Waal, 36 Old Pasture Road

Democratic process hijacked

I am one of the Conservation Commissioners who was not reappointed by the Board of Selectmen last week. This letter is not about the fact that I was not reappointed – it is totally the right and responsibility of the Selectmen to appoint whomever they wish. I respect that and am fine with it.

What this letter is about is democracy and the reminder to me about how fragile it is. I did not see the democratic process at work at the Selectmen's meeting. Instead I saw a group of self-interested citizens who, through a combination of determination and cronyism, hijack the democratic process. There was no appearance of open deliberation. The vote to dismiss us was taken with lightning speed.

With shock, I realized that self-interest was ruling Cohasset on that night. I've seen it happen on the national and state level and now it is here in Cohasset. I fear for our future if we stand by and let the people who govern be motivated by self-interest and cronyism, and forget the concept that used to be the benchmark for democracy – decisions should be made for the greater common good, which includes our environment that sustains all of us.

Please think about this when elections come up. Don't let people run unopposed. Make them remember their duty is to make decisions that provide benefits for the greater common good, not the select few, whether it is in town or our state or our nation. If we aren't vigilant and don't nurture democracy, we could easily lose it. —Debbie Cook, 281 King St.

MAKING TRACKS

Storm mode in working order

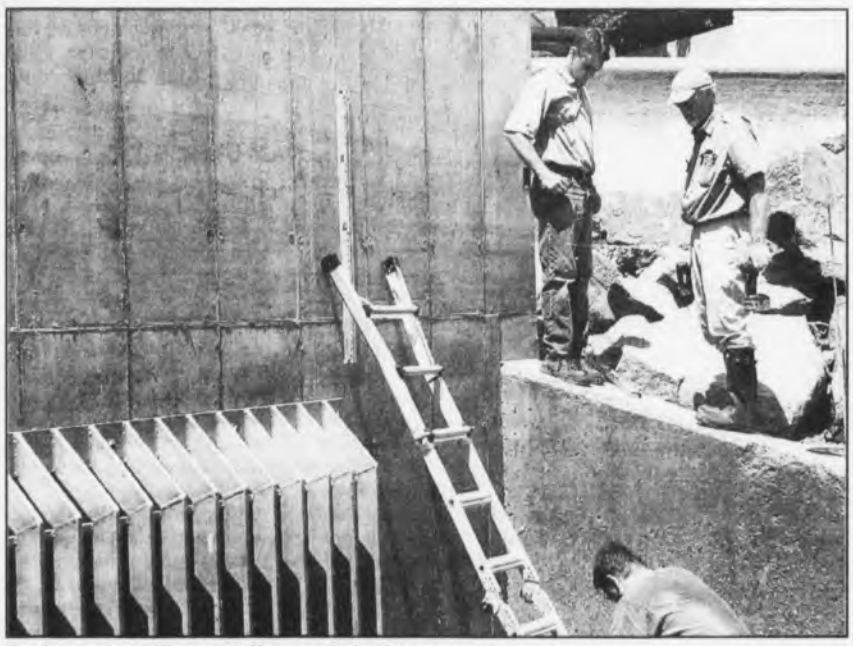
TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Jacobs Meadow Outfall Project —The Jacobs Meadow outfall project is winding its way to completion. Although the gate has been in service for a several weeks, there is still testing that needed to be completed for some of the special operating conditions. On Tuesday of this week a major test was conducted successfully. This tested the gate's performance for operating in "storm mode."

Storm mode is the operation that allows the Town to maximize the amount of storm water that can be stored in Jacobs Meadow during a big rain event. Remember, that about 20 percent of the Town's surface area drains into Jacobs Meadow. Big rains, like a nor'easter, mean large amounts of water will end up in Jacobs Meadow. But this water can only exit to the ocean when the level of the harbor water will permit the flow. That is, the harbor tide level must be lower than the water in the meadow. The storm mode of operation is designed to reduce the chance of flooding damage by increasing the ability of the meadow to hold storm water. This can only happen if the meadow is as empty as possible prior to a storm.

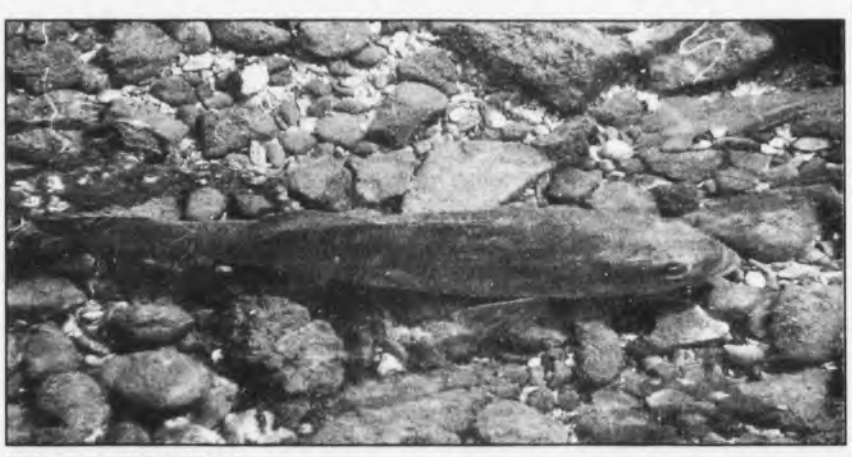
Whenever we know that a large rainfall is heading our way the DPW will put the gate into storm mode. Thus, in advance of a storm, storm mode will let the meadow be as dry as it can be. The operation of storm mode was thoroughly tested this week by the contractor and his engineer who developed the software to control the gate. It passed with flying colors.

Also, recently we were able to catch a photo of our engineers as they were mounting a staff gauge on the wall of the new gate chamber. A staff gauge is a vertical measuring stick that is set at a calibrated height so that the level of harbor water can be read from the gauge. Another staff gauge was also mounted on the wall next to the legion building to measure the level of water in the channel. These gauges are useful to determine water levels in the harbor or in the channel at a glance.



Just to point out that the Jacobs Meadow is populated with sea critters, we have enclosed a photo of a fish that was sighted in James Brook in the new channel. This fellow was about 5 or 6 inches long and has been identified by the Division of Marine Fisheries as a large or smallmouth bass. We'll take their word for it.

Meeting House Pond —We have had a number of people stop by our office to ask what's going on with Meeting House Pond. They were surprised to see the brand new pond empty of water and cordoned off once again, just when they thought the construction was complete. However, in reality, it was not complete. The construction was never finished before winter came. There was a major push for us to not have an empty pond facing the Town all winter. So, the pond was filled with water and pressed into use. Consequently, we are faced with finishing it now.



What remains to be done? We mentioned last year that the bottom of the pond is made up of a special clay material. Clay has the unique property that if it compacted well, it becomes relatively impervious to water. (As an aside, if you have ever tried to get a yard with a high clay content to absorb rain water, you know that just doesn't happen. The rainwater just puddles, and doesn't soak in. That's the result of clay being impervious.)

In order to do a proper compaction, the clay needs to be fairly dry. It certainly can't be compacted when it is soaking wet. We had enough precipitation to keep the clay wet enough that it couldn't be well compacted. That's the reason that we didn't have enough time to finish the compaction late last fall. So, let's fast forward to July of 2011. The pond has been drained and we are waiting for the clay to dry sufficiently so that the compaction can take place. Let's hope that the clay is able to dry out so it can be properly compacted and we can have the use of our new pond back. The contractor says the process should take two to three weeks, depending on the weather.

HEALTH NOTES

Protecting yourself from mosquitos

STEVE BOBO

Take special care to cover up the arms and legs of children playing outdoors. When you take a baby outdoors, cover the baby's carriage or playpen with mosquito netting.

Summer's Here! and so are the mosquitoes We've spoken about sun and its harmful effects. It's time to plan against health threats like mosquitoes. Every summer, we face an increased risk of two different viruses that are spread through bites by infected mosquitoes — West Nile virus (WNV) and eastern equine encephalitis (EEE). These mosquito-borne illnesses can cause serious health problems. The good news is it's relatively easy to "mosquito-proof" your home. So far, mosquito risk is low with few reported cases, however, as summer progresses, the risk from mosquitoes increases. But in our busy days, we've all had the experience of being out somewhere and hearing or seeing and swatting, a mosquito. Cohasset is now categorized in the Low Risk Category for WNV and we will probably remain in the category listing indicating that the risk is remote. According to the DPH, all of the current indications are that the risk for human cases of EEE in some areas of southeastern Massachusetts may be high. Aerial application of pesticides is being planned, considerably reducing the threat.

Iisolated WNV findings in mosquitoes are expected. Although, generally the risk of human disease is not predicted to be high at this time, standard prevention messages and activities are being implemented.

Reduce your risk of being infected by using insect repellent, wearing protective clothing, and staying indoors while mosquitoes are most active. If you think you or a family member may have EEE, it is important to consult your healthcare provider for proper diagnosis. The following expedients are appropriate: Have them ready and available if you expect mosquitoes in your neighborhood.

Use bug sprays that contain DEET, permethrin, IR3535 or picaridin (KBR 3023) to provide protection against mosquitoes. In addition, oil of lemon eucalyptus has been found to provide as much protection as low concentrations of DEET.

Take special care to cover up the arms and legs of children playing outdoors. When you take a baby outdoors, cover the baby's carriage or playpen with mosquito netting. Consider rescheduling outdoor activities that take place during evening or early morning hours. That's prime time for mosquito bites.

Fix any holes in your screens and make sure they are tightly attached to all your doors and windows.

Remove sources of standing water around your home. Mosquitoes will begin to breed in any puddle or standing water that lasts for more than four days. Check gutters, ceramic pots, trashcans, recycling containers, old tires, wading pools, birdbaths, etc.

The Dead Bird Program; counting dead birds.

Early in the EEE/WNV eradication effort, following the identification of WNV in birds and mosquitoes in Massachusetts the DPH began a program to strengthen several aspects of the state plan for mosquito-borne virus surveillance and prevention of mosquito-borne disease, including listing dead bird sightings. The program addressed methods of surveillance, risk reduction interventions, pesticide toxicity and communication.

When it was first introduced into the United States, WNV caused high mortality rates in certain species of birds, particularly corvids (birds of the crow family), thus reporting and testing of dead birds was a productive way to detect and monitor WNV activity in an area. In addition, blood samples from animals from other sources such as zoos or horse stables, or wild animals were evaluated.

Later, dead bird sightings became less effective and other methods of making positive findings in mosquitoes (WNV and EEE) in a given town were found; reported and adjacent towns were notified daily. Thus was the EEE/WNV surveillance system begun.

Accordingly, the level of EEE and WNV control activity is adjusted to reflect the risks for increased virus transmission to humans. Typically, risk for any individual is expected to be relatively low, and the routine precautions taken by individuals may be sufficient to reduce opportunities for infection. When such conditions exist, the DPH has a ready-made system in place for reporting such conditions. MDPH now works collaboratively with other state agencies and regional mosquito control projects to collectively identify and support the use of safe and effective mosquito control measures based on integrated pest management (IPM) principles.

FOR THE RECORD

Getting RAN up and running

GREGORY MATHIS

We've always been big on reader participation. We're not providing a true community newspaper unless the community is an active participant.

From letters to the editor, to birth announcements, to engagement and wedding announcements, to youth sports wrap-ups, to listings for upcoming community events, our readers have always been a big part of our success.

We've recently taken reader participation to another level, creating a page for Your News each week and posting photo galleries of reader-submitted photos in our Your Photos section on the website.

We've also made it easier to submit news and photos, wedding and anniversary announcements, calendar items and local sports news through our websites under the "Submit Your News" tab.

While we greatly appreciate and welcome the content you provide for our newspapers and websites, there are other areas you can help us.

I'm in the process of creating a Readers Advisory Network (RAN) for the expansive geography we cover in the South unit of GateHouse Media New England. That geography includes 30 towns in three counties, with 27 newspapers and 30 websites.

What is a Readers Advisory Network?

It will serve multiple purposes in the model I'm trying to create.

The first step is to create an email database of those participating in RAN. I'm looking to have at least two people from each of the 30 towns we cover.

Readers who join the email network may be asked for reactions to stories, ideas for stories or follow-ups, to provide potential sources for stories, for a "digital person on the street" interview or for community commentary. You would also be asked for feedback on a somewhat regular basis on various aspects of the newspaper and website.

For that reason, I'm not just looking for people who are longtime subscribers and love the newspaper. Ideally, it would be good to get a mix of readers who prefer the website over the newspaper, who stopped subscribing to the newspaper but somehow still managed to come across this column or just have some solid, constructive criticism on what they'd like to see in their newspaper or on the website.

Once I get the electronic component of RAN up and running, I'll work on setting up three to four Readers Advisory Network meetings based on geography. Those meetings, which will likely be set up after Sept. 1, will give us an opportunity to meet face-to-face and allow for RAN members to meet one another. The agenda for those meetings would likely include a synopsis of our company, some of the initiatives we've recently launched or getting ready to launch and allow some time for RAN members to provide feedback and critiques of the newspaper and website.

So if this sounds interesting, send an email to gmathis@wickedlocal.com with "RAN" in the subject line and tell me a little bit about yourself. Depending on the response, I may follow up with a quick survey if there are more than two people interested from a particular town.

Then I'll start building the network. Its success will once again depend on you.

(Editor's note: this is a new regional RAN and does not replace the popular Cohasset Mariner Readers Advisory Network that has been in existence for about 10 years).

Gregory Mathis is editor-in-chief for GateHouse Media New England's South unit, with offices in Marshfield, Plymouth and Raynham.

Upcoming events at the Farmer's Market

The Cohasset Farmers Market will be holding a Tomato Fest on Thursday, Aug. 25. Prizes for the biggest, best tasting and ugliest specimens will be awarded.

On Thursday, Sept. 22, an As American as Apple Pie contest will take place. Participants will receive a thank you treat.

Cat Dam: Setting the record straight

RALPH DORMITZER

One can date the beginning of the controversy over Cat Dam to November 2006, when the Town engaged Weston and Sampson engineers to inspect the dam.

At the Selectmen's meeting last Tuesday, July 12, the Board of Selectmen voted to replace three Conservation Commission members. This was, to my knowledge, an unprecedented action by the Board. It was preceded by and the result of an unprecedented action by the Conservation Commission: at a Selectmen's meeting on April 7, 2008, on behalf of the Commission, Sarah Charron peremptorily asserted jurisdiction over Cat Dam. The Selectmen had held five meetings over eight months in an effort to reach an amicable solution among the neighbors concerning tidal flow through Cat Dam. Needless to say, the neighbors and the Selectmen deserved, at very least, fair warning that, irrespective of any agreement among the neighbors, the Con Com intended at the outset to assert jurisdiction and control over the dam. The following is an account of the events that led to last Tuesday's vote.

Cat Dam is a control structure that regulates tidal flushing of Inner Little Harbor (ILH), an area bounded roughly by Nichols Road to the south, Jerusalem Road and Little Harbor Road to the west, Atlantic Avenue to the north and James Island to the east. The dam is located on Nichols Road about 1,000 feet from the intersection of Nichols Road and Jerusalem Road. The dam consists of three gates or flapper valves that admit water on the incoming tide and limit flow on the outgoing tide in order to retain water cover within ILH while providing tidal flushing. The Commonwealth built the current dam in 1957, replacing an older dam that had been there since the construction of Nichols Road in 1882. According to historian Oliver Howe, writing in 1937, the original dam was there to "preserve a uniform level of water and occasionally to renew it" — essentially the same objective as that of the current dam.

The natural tidal exchange of the new dam proved insufficient to arrest the growth of algae in ILH, particularly in the area farthest from the dam itself. Hence in 1975 the DEQE (predecessor of the DEP) recommended scheduled mechanical openings of the tide gates to increase flushing. They proposed that between January 1 and March 15 of each year, the gates be secured fully open, and that each month thereafter, the gates be opened for three days at the highest and lowest tide cycles. In 1986 the Town had the schedule reviewed by LEC Environmental Consultants, who concluded that the Town should continue the current practice. Since there are annual variations in the dates of high tides, Dennis McNulty, an abutter, provided a schedule to DPW each year in accordance with the DEQE recommendation. This practice was followed until 2008.

One can date the beginning of the controversy over Cat Dam to November 2006, when the Town engaged Weston and Sampson engineers to inspect the dam. Since the wooden gates and some of the supporting steel structure were severely compromised, they recommended that a major repair be undertaken. This repair was widely supported by the abutters, but not all of them. A minority protested the repair and demanded that the gates be permanently secured in the open position. The repair was undertaken nevertheless by the Town in December 2007. The majority abutters contributed the entire contract price of $21,750.

Not to be deterred, however, on Aug. 27, 2007, one of the minority abutters contacted Selectman Ted Carr with a proposal that Coastal Zone Management (CZM) undertake a study of ILH and that the Selectmen discuss the issue at an upcoming meeting. On Oct. 15, 2007, that meeting, attended by nearly all the abutters of ILH, took place. There was extensive and lengthy discussion by both sides, including a debate on the engagement of CZM and the schedule of gate openings. There was no resolution of the issue at that meeting but a strong recommendation was made that the abutters or a subcommittee thereof meet to agree on a schedule of gate openings among themselves. Specifically, the proposal that CZM undertake the study was rejected.

The Selectmen met again on this issue on Dec. 3, 2007. This time the minority abutters requested that the control of Cat Dam be referred to the Conservation Commission. The Selectmen rejected this request. The Chairman asked that abutters agree on a formal subcommittee and return with a recommended schedule by January 2008.

On Dec. 17, the Selectmen voted to reject the study by CZM as well as the proposal to turn over control to the Conservation Commission. They also recommended that four abutters representing both sides be selected to return with a recommended dam operating schedule.

On March 24, Town Manager Bill Griffin informed the Selectmen that a schedule for Cat Dam had been agreed to by the committee of area residents. Selectman Ted Carr asked that the representatives be contacted to confirm that they were all satisfied with the new schedule, and he moved to approve the flushing schedule pursuant to the town manager talking with the committee members.

On April 7, 2008, Sarah Charron of the Conservation Commission (Con Com) attended the Selectmen's meeting. On the agenda was a discussion of the continuing controversy over the proposed schedule. After a brief discussion Ms. Charron addressed the board. She asserted that since the new schedule had been implemented, the jurisdiction over Cat Dam now fell under the Wetlands Protection Act and the Con Com, and that a Notice of Intent was required for an "after the fact" event.

In fact, however, the new schedule had not been implemented. In the period between March 15 and approximately April 17 when the original schedule was ultimately reinstated, no action had been taken. The gates had not been closed as a result of confusion over whether the old or proposed new schedule was to be implemented. Irrespective of this, in five prior meetings over eight months where a new schedule had been discussed, no Conservation Committee member had informed the Selectmen of their intention to take jurisdiction. Indeed we would have welcomed their equal participation in the discussions. It is now clear that the Con Com had no intention of honoring the outcome of the democratic process the Selectmen had pursued. Moreover, normal courtesy between boards in the Town dictates that there be cooperation and consultation when there are jurisdictional differences. The fact is that the Con Com, presumably supported by a majority of their board, blind-sided the Selectmen and arbitrarily abrogated the agreement among the abutters.

There are consequences to what happened on April 7, 2008. For the abutters the one-year struggle to reach an agreement has now stretched to four years with no resolution in sight. The Town has spent $40,000 and the abutters $65,000, and three Con Com members have been replaced. Anger and confrontation have superseded cooperation, and reputations have been damaged. What happened on Tuesday night at the Selectmen's meeting may have been unprecedented, but it was nevertheless appropriate. It was a notice to the Con Com that, however important their environmental work, they have a duty to provide fair warning to all parties — especially to another town board — when they anticipate that an action may cause a violation, and to work cooperatively with the people who come before them.

Flooding report discussion July 28

The Stormwater Advisory Committee is putting together its annual flood prone report and needs resident input. A public meeting is scheduled for Thursday, July 28 at Cohasset Town Hall.

One of the items on the agenda is to collect information from Cohasset residents and other interested parties about areas in Cohasset subject to flooding. This meeting will provide the public with an opportunity to update the Committee on the status of previous/past areas subject to flooding and inform the Committee of any new areas subject to flooding. The Committee anticipates receiving comments starting about 7:45p.m. that evening.

This survey is being performed to address one of the charges of the Stormwater Advisory Committee: to conduct an annual inventory of flood prone areas in Cohasset on behalf of the Selectmen and interested town committees as a supplement to the Final Flood Control Master Plan of 2009.

If an interested party is unable to attend the meeting they are welcome to send the following information to the Stormwater Advisory Committee at Town Hall by August 3: name, address, contact number (for follow-up, if necessary), location of flooding, time period and description when flooding occurs, understanding of the cause of flooding, and any other useful information.

As appropriate, the Stormwater Advisory Committee may follow-up with the individuals and/or tour the identified area subject to flooding to obtain additional information.

Selectmen owe us an explanation

DEBBIE SHADD

While the Selectmen may have the right to replace the members of an appointed board without giving an explanation for their vote, this seems like an abuse of power.

The following was sent to the Board of Selectmen with a copy to the Mariner for publication.

I am writing to express my dismay at the way the appointments to the Conservation Commission were handled at the July 12th Selectmen's meeting, which I attended.

Three experienced voting members of the Con Comm were up for reappointment at the end of the fiscal year (as were members of the Open Space Committee, including me, and members of several other committees). At the June 28th Selectmen's meeting, it was pointed out that many current town committee members who had expressed interest in continuing had not yet completed the online ethics training now required by the state. The Selectmen voted to extend all these committee members' appointments until the July 12th meeting in order to give people a chance to complete the ethics training. It was never suggested to me at least that I might be competing for reappointment with someone who expressed interest in the position after the close of the fiscal year. I believe the same was true for the Con Comm members.

Yet it sounds like 7 individuals submitted letters expressing interest in serving on the Conservation Commission on July 11th, the day before the July 12th meeting and these names were put forward as candidates for the Con Comm together with the three current members. Five of the new candidates and all 3 of the Con Comm members up for reappointment made statements explaining their interest in and qualifications for serving on this particular committee. Judging from these statements, none of the new candidates had backgrounds as relevant for the Con Comm as the three sitting members have and none had ever served on a Conservation Committee before.

David Farrag, Chairman of the Con Comm, explained at the meeting that the committee's longstanding practice has been to have new members join as non-voting associate members, to give them time to become familiar with the Wetlands Protection Act and the complex regulations under it, which the Con Comm administers. The Zoning Board of Appeals has a similar non-voting associate member status. The Con Comm has had two associate positions open for two years, despite attempts to attract interested citizens via notices in the Mariner. In those two years, none of the 7 new applicants had expressed interest in joining the Con Comm.

I and many others in the audience on July 12th expected that, having taken the ethics training, the three Con Comm members who were up for reappointment, and who were the only citizens who had expressed interest in the Con Comm before the end of the fiscal year, would be reappointed. They were all experienced and highly qualified members who have already taken general state training for Con Comm members. Some have directly relevant professional qualifications in the areas the Con Comm works in and one had been deeply involved with the town's new stormwater regulations, which the Con Comm helps to administer. All 3 have devoted countless hours to the town through their service on one of the Town's most demanding committees. There was no obvious reason they would not be reappointed for a new term.

Very unexpectedly, a motion was made and seconded to appoint three of the 7 new applicants to full voting positions on the Con Comm, in total disregard of the Con Comm's longstanding use of associate positions for new members. This seemed like an insult to the Con Comm Chairman and a dangerous precedent for other committees who enforce complex regulations. In addition, when members of the public tried to comment on this unexpected procedure, they weren't allowed to speak, on the theory that the public comment period was over. (Comment was allowed after those of the candidates who were present had presented their qualifications, but it was hardly obvious, given the Con Comm Chairman's explanation about the 2 empty associate positions, that an attempt would be made to appoint new members directly to voting positions.) No Selectman explained why this was appropriate, though Selectman Kennedy did point out that there was no discussion at the Selectmen's June 28th meeting of not reappointing board members who completed the ethics training during the 2-week extension of their term.

There seemed to be a rush to replace 3 experienced members of the Con Comm with 3 new members with no Con Comm experience and no particularly relevant professional experience in environmental work. None of the 3 Selectmen who voted to replace the 3 incumbent Con Comm members made any attempt to explain what their thinking was. Vague references were made to the need for new people on boards and to an alleged lack of "collaborative" spirit on the part of the replaced members. Yet one of the ousted voting Con Comm members has only served for 3 years and none of the Selectmen suggested instituting term limits for all Town boards. Historically, many Town boards, and the Board of Selectmen, have had citizens who have served for years. And a Board charged with enforcing state laws and regulations will not always be able to "collaborate" with citizens seeking a specific result before them.

In addition, no one expressed any real gratitude to the two longstanding Con Comm members for their many contributions to the Town. And when one new applicant and one current Con Comm member were then appointed to fill the associate positions vacant for two years, no one explained how it was appropriate to "demote" a current, voting Con Comm member to associate status. I know he agreed to do this, but if he was qualified to be an associate member, why wasn't he qualified to remain a full member?

While the obvious conflict several of the 7 new applicants would have on the Cat Dam issue currently before the Con Comm was raised, one of the people appointed to full voting positions on the Con Comm lives on inner Little Harbor. It also appears that 6 of the new candidates' applications were delivered to the acting Town Manager by another resident of inner Little Harbor.

The clear impression left by all of the above was that experienced, long-serving and well qualified members of an important Town commission charged with insuring compliance with state wetlands protection laws were being punished for their presumed position on one particular issue and replaced with people who presumably have a different view. While the Selectmen may have the right to replace the members of an appointed board without giving an explanation for their vote, this seems like an abuse of power.

I worry that the Selectmen's actions will make it much harder to attract qualified people to serve on our most demanding committees. Why would anyone join a committee that required training in the administration of complex regulations and then spend time in a non-voting associate role if they might be replaced any time 3 or more Selectmen disagreed with a position they took (or were even suspected of taking in the future)? I am also afraid that the Con Comm will be hindered in its important work for a considerable period of time while its three new voting members get up to speed on the regulations they will need to enforce.

I think the 3 Selectmen who voted in the majority on July 12th owe the Town an explanation for their actions. And I for one would like to express my appreciation for the countless hours and years the two ousted members have devoted to the important work of the Conservation Commission. The Town has lost the service of two very dedicated citizens.

Cat Dam deliberation postponed

Due to illness, the scheduled start of the Cat Dam deliberation among the Conservation Commission was postponed this week. The meeting has been re-scheduled to Monday, July 25 at 7p.m. at Town Hall. Notice of the postponement came via e-mail from interim town manager Jennifer Oram. The meeting had been scheduled for Wednesday evening.

BOWEN

"I kept hoping that Tim would make it back or that the launch would be delayed," Bowen explained. "It wasn't until two weeks before launch that I realized I was going."

Referring to his wife, Bowen said: "Debbie packed a year's worth of stress into those last two weeks. Up until then, we had figured I'm a placeholder."

Bowen emphasized, out of genuine respect for Kopra, his fellow astronaut classmate of 2000: "This is not the way you want to be selected to a flight."

Cohasset's astronaut said he performed one practice run for each of the two STS-133 spacewalks in the NBL (Neutral Buoyancy Laboratory), the swimming pool in which astronauts train in their spacesuits.

The bonus for NASA, said Bowen, is that his unexpected space flight can serve as "a model going forward" for International Space Station (ISS) astronauts after the shuttle's retirement this month.

Bowen pointed out that, if contingencies arise, the six ISS crewmembers may not have rehearsed a specific spacewalk before performing it in real time.

"So STS-133 was a unique opportunity for us to demonstrate that ability," Bowen concluded.

Memorial Day Parade memories

Bowen got a warm inflection in his voice as soon as he started talking about his May visit to participate in Cohasset's annual Memorial Day parade.

"I really wanted to do that Memorial Day thing," he announced.

While he was in town, Bowen returned the Town of Cohasset flag that had traveled with him aboard shuttle Atlantis during STS-132.

His hometown trip and returning the flag this year were originally part of that mission's post-flight activities, planned "before the 133 thing got in the way," he joked.

Bowen also revealed that this was not the first time he had participated in the local parade. He marched in the parade back in 1979, then as a sousaphone player in Cohasset High School's band.

Bowen stated: "We honored the people who gave their lives to allow us to fly in space." He explained that some of his earliest memories for parades involve Memorial Day in Cohasset. "The parade is about the names and families associated with that day."

The astronaut said he recognized the Keating family as he passed the cemetery.

"To me, it meant a lot to march in the parade, especially before I retired from the Navy."

As of July 1, Bowen retired from the Navy as a captain, after 25 years of service.

'The last-last flight'

Since the STS-133 crew's final post-flight activity concluded last week, Bowen has again resumed his position as EVA branch chief — just in time to support STS-135, the final flight in NASA's 30-year-long shuttle program.

Bowen jokingly referred to his STS-132 mission as "the first-last flight of Atlantis" and the recent STS-135 mission as "the last-last flight."

By coincidence, STS-135 Commander Chris Ferguson of Philadelphia also served as the commander for STS-126, Bowen's first shuttle flight.

"Fergy is so calm," revealed Bowen. "He is well-suited for this mission. Things won't phase him."

Last Tuesday, Bowen served as the EVA capcom, the person in Mission Control who communicates with astronauts performing spacewalks. ISS astronauts Mike Fossum and Ron Garan conducted the final spacewalk scheduled during a shuttle mission.

For 6 hours and 31 minutes, Bowen enjoyed "the best seat in the house" as he assisted STS-135 astronaut Rex Walheim orchestrate the spacewalkers' movements outside.

"This was one spacewalk where no kidding, we got everything done," Bowen enthused. "This [STS-135] crew has a lot of smiles.

"They're a great crew to finish out the program."

Eight days prior to his STS-135 launch, Ferguson sat down with the Cohasset Mariner in Houston for 10 minutes.

What will be the most rewarding part of this final mission? Ferguson replied: "I think the most rewarding part for me personally will be when it's all over.

"Having experienced it once [in his role as STS-126 commander], there is no better feeling than walking out of the space shuttle and standing at the bottom, literally looking up at it and thinking: 'Wow! You know, we did it.'

"That is such a rewarding feeling."

- Name: Stephen G. Bowen (Captain, U.S. Navy, retired)
- Hometown: Cohasset, Mass.
- Occupation: NASA astronaut since 2000
- n Space Flights: Mission specialist on three space shuttle missions: STS-126 Endeavour (Nov. 14-30, 2008) with three spacewalks, STS-132 Atlantis (May 14-26, 2010) with two spacewalks, and STS-133 Discovery (Feb. 24 – March 9, 2011) with two spacewalks.
- NASA Notables: First submarine officer selected as a NASA astronaut. Only astronaut to fly on consecutive space shuttle missions. One of six astronauts aboard the final flight of space shuttle Discovery. One of the very few astronauts to have flown on all three surviving space shuttles.

Russian and robotics

Now that shuttle launches are history, when will Bowen return to Cohasset?

He joked: "They should be sick of me by now."

Then Bowen revealed that he plans a personal visit this fall to visit family.

On the professional front, all NASA astronauts are faced with only Russian Soyuz spacecraft rides for a six-month ISS flight until — sometime during the next five years — U.S. commercial companies finish developing and testing their spacecraft that will subsequently resume liftoffs from U.S. soil.

So what chance does Bowen have to receive a future space station assignment?

Bowen answered like he and Whitson, his astronaut boss, had already discussed the subject. "I have to get my Russian up to speed," he acknowledged, adding he has not studied that language during the past four years. "And I need more robotics training," in order to operate the ISS mechanical arm.

"But, at some point, my opportunity will come up."

town's elder services budget once the building is built.

Concerns with the Social Service League taking over the project privately have arisen in the community following its announcement a few weeks ago.

In a letter to the Selectmen, Doane Street resident Joan Brown raised numerous questions about the project. The conveyance of the town land – how and if it would be transferred, as well as at what price – was one of them. She asked if the senior center would be the only tenant in the building and if, down the line, the Social Service League wanted to sell the property would it be offered (first) to the town and at what price.

Carlson said her questions were valid ones and questions he anticipated a new committee to address.

At the meeting, Ralph Dormitzer of Atlantic Avenue said he was concerned with the focus of the project.

"I certainly recognize the need for a facility, but not enough thought has been given to what services would be provided and required once it's built," Dormitzer said. "You don't start with the building, you start with what you want to do."

Martha Gjesteby of Old Pasture Road took issue with the process so far with the project.

"There has been no hearing on what the townspeople needed or wanted (in a senior center)," Gjesteby said. "I'm very upset we're poised to give money (to a project) and have someone else own the building."

She called having the building built privately "highly unusual."

Selectman Diane Kennedy said there was nothing set in stone as of yet.

"We need to re-focus on the issues involving the town. There's a lot of work to be done," Kennedy said.

Director of Elder Affairs Coral Grande said she and her staff have drafted a three-page document of what sort of services they aim to provide in the new building.

The Selectmen voted unanimously to sunset the senior center building committee and form a senior center building group with a different charge.

The critical issues the committee has been charged to address include: protecting the town's interests in the land transactions; determining the lease terms and conditions; defining the level of municipal services to be provided to the building; measuring the impact on the town budget and developing a strategy for funding the additional costs; creating Requests for Proposals in conjunction with the Town Manager and the Finance Director; and financing of the furnishings for the senior center.

The group will make recommendations and advise the Selectmen and Town Manager on the project.

No appointments were made to the committee last week.

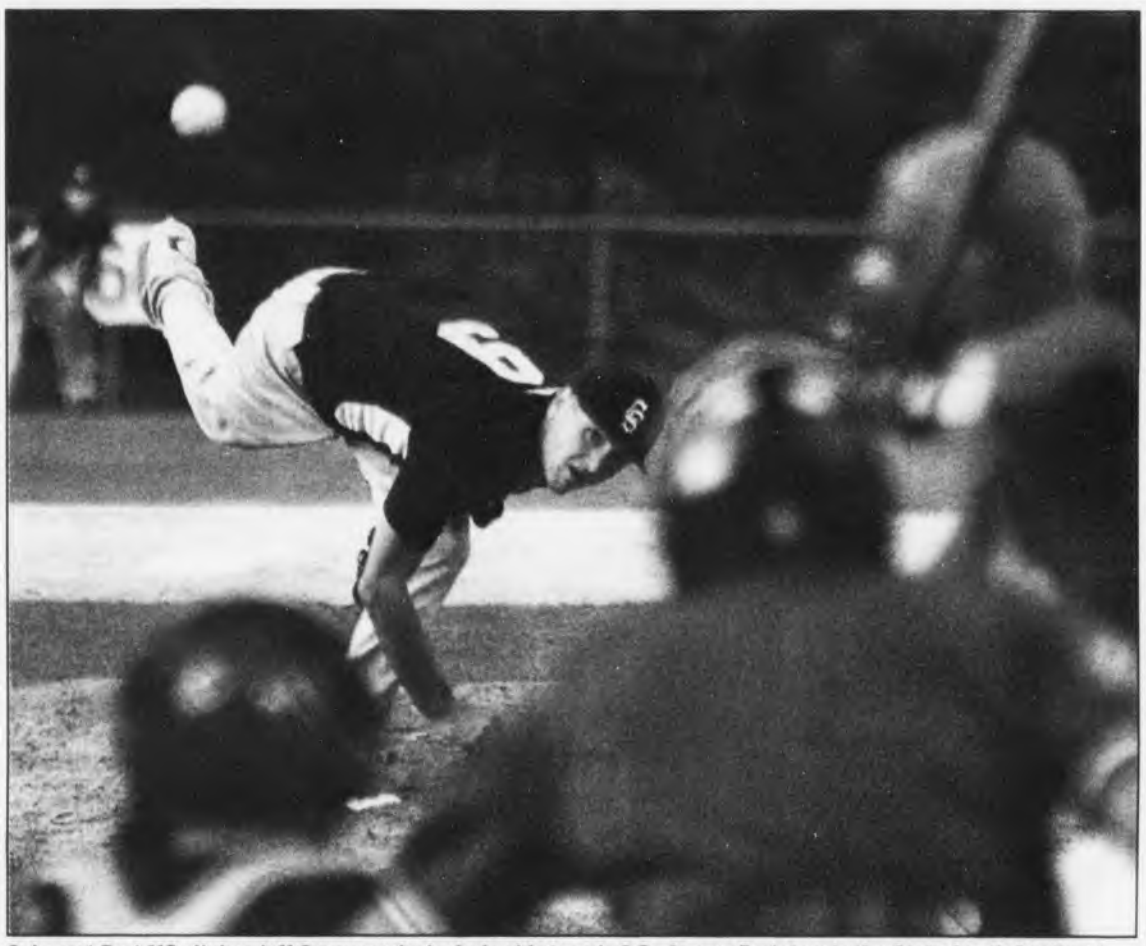
The Girls of Summer

For the first time in history, Cohasset has entered a team in the South Shore Summer Softball League (SSSSL). The girls are playing in the Under 12 North/South Division 2 against high quality competition from the South Shore including towns such as Marshfield, Halifax and Raynham.



After winning the 2011 Hingham softball league U12 championships, the coaching team of Tony Talacci, Peter Vitello, Lee Stone and Amy Brash decided that the Cohasset girls were ready for the next level of competitive play and volunteered to coach the summer team with the help of Jill Lawlor, a former player for Wentworth. Standout players from all three of the Cohasset spring softball teams have combined to form the team.

Next stop States

Post 118 wins South Sectional bracket

The Cohasset Post 118 American Legion baseball team is headed into uncharted territory this weekend.

For the first time in team history, Post 118 will be playing in the third round of the American Legion State Tournament.

Credit that accomplishment to a simple formula – great pitching, outstanding defense and a big bomb at the right time.

Cohasset got that and more Wednesday night in a 6-3 win over Braintree in what turned out to be the series

AMERICAN LEGION BASEBALL

Achieving their goals

Post 118 rolls to and in South Sectionals

By Mark Ducharme
Gate House News Service

Cohasset American Legion baseball general manager Scott Arnold understands that if you stick to your goals then good things can possibly happen.

Post 118 proved that to their general manager with the way that they played down the stretch and in the best of three crossover Zone 6 playoff series with Medfield.

"I thought late in the season that the best way for us to compete in the playoffs was to finish third," said Arnold. "Our record with Medfield was similar except for our tie with Braintree. The players won their last games in the regular season and clinched third. I like that we set the goal and got it. We were able to defeat Medfield and that gave us a big lift."

Cohasset, which had not advanced out of Zone 6 since 1995 used its pitching and defense to defeat Medfield in two straight games to advance to the State South Sectional, where they have won their first two games of the double-elimination tournament, including a 9-5 win over Braintree on Tuesday night.

In the Tuesday night win over Braintree, which set up a 7:30 p.m. game Wednesday against either Easton or Braintree, Cohasset exploded for eight runs in the fourth inning against Braintree ace Chris Fox.

GOLF NOTES

Loud grumblers are a nuisance to the game

PAUL HARBER

It was a magnificent State Amateur championship at Wyantenuck Country Club in the Berkshires, especially with one of our local golfers taking away the championship.

But I'm sure there were members at the Great Barrington golf course who grumbled the tournament interfered with their routine matches last week.

It's the same way at every club, from a hard-scrabble nine-hole muny track like Cedar Hill in Stoughton, to the most exclusive clubs in America such as The Country Club in Brookline.

Outside events, be they charity raising functions or competitive tournaments that take a couple of days worth of tee times away from the membership, are greeted with distain by small yet vocal minority of members who aren't happy because they can't tee it up every day at their usual time.

These golfers believe that if they pay a year's dues to have the privilege to play their particular golf course, they feel they own the facility and have the right to dictate to those whose job is to operate these clubs.

What Wyantenuck gained from this, their first State Amateur, was a wealth of respect from golfers from all across the state, but that doesn't matter to those closed minded hackers who only care about their golf games and their tee times.

Because of these self-important individuals, the U.S. Golf Association will not hold the U.S. Open at The Country Club in Brookline in 2013, the 100th anniversary of Francis Ouimet's groundbreaking victory that opened the game to the general public.

These folks have been around before Donald Ross built his first golf course and they will be around until the end of time.

And, hopefully, they will be ignored.

Future stars in Plymouth

Some of the top amateurs in the country are at Plymouth CC this week to compete in the American Junior Golf Association's Deutsche Bank Partners Shoot Out.

The 96-player field includes golfers from 17 states and four foreign countries – Canada, Macau, Mexico and South Korea. Some 27 players from Massachusetts are in the field.

The AJGA has traveled to the Boston area each year since 2004, with Deutsche Bank Partners for Charity sponsoring the event for the last three years.

Five participants will be heading to college in the fall to continue their golf career. One junior has given a verbal commitment for the 2012 season. They are Matt Carville of Auburn, Mass. (University of Hartford), Joe Cooper of Wayland, Mass. (Bowling Green), Kevin DeHuff of Coto de Caza, Calif. (Pepperdine), Colin McDade of Rye, N.Y. (Richmond), Chris Wiatr of Woodbury, Conn. (Connecticut) and Samantha Marks of Maitland, Fla. (Verbal – North Carolina)

Last year's winners, Michael Johnson and Juliet Vongphoumy, went on to accomplish even more. Johnson won the 2010 Junior PLAYERS Championship and recorded top-10 finishes in his next three Invitational starts. The first-team Rolex Junior All-American climbed all the way to No. 4 in the Polo Golf Rankings. The win for Vongphoumy was her second of three consecutive AJGA victories, tying an AJGA record. She also earned Rolex Junior All-America honors and has signed a National Letter of Intent with Maryland.

Among the top players to watch are Nick McLaughlin of New Castle, N.H. McLaughlin will be looking for his second AJGA victory with his first coming at the 2009 CorseMax / Philadelphia Runner Junior. The 43rd-ranked junior in the Polo Golf Rankings has three additional top-10 finishes, including a third-place showing at the 2011 Western Junior Championship in June. Joe Cooper of Wayland will look to continue his success playing in his home state as he finished T6 in the 2010 Deutsche Bank Partners for Charity Junior Shoot Out. A recent graduate of Wayland High School, Cooper has notched two additional top-20 finishes in his two-year AJGA career and signed a National Letter of Intent with Bowling Green State University. Samantha Marks, Maitland, Fla., finished seventh in last year's tournament. The rising senior will be looking to record her first AJGA victory as she has three top-five finishes, including a second-place showing at the 2010 Woodward Video Junior at The Greenbrier.

GOLFER OF THE WEEK

Ryan Riley, Norton CC

Ryan Riley of Norton Country Club not only was the best golfer in the region last week, he was the best golfer in the state, outlasting high decorated Frank Vana of Marlborough Country Club to win the 103rd Massachusetts Amateur Championship at Wyantenuck Country Club in Great Barrington.

Riley, 30, won the 36-hole final by a score of 4 & 3.

A family man, Riley took his wife, two children and parents to the Berkshires and when he wasn't searching for birdies, they were exploring the region.

Ryan Riley of Norton CC holds the trophy. COURTESY PHOTO

What the championship means to Riley:
"This is the culmination of everything that I have been doing for 10 years. It gives me some affirmation that all of the hard work from the last few years in swing changes and preparation has paid off."

What else has Riley won:
This was his fifth career MGA Championship. He has won three straight Massachusetts Four-Ball Championships (2009, 2010, 2011) and one Massachusetts Amateur Public Links Championship (2009).

What about Wyantenuck Country Club's layout:
"I have played a lot of golf and there are always a couple of holes that you don't like but that is not the case here. I felt like I could pull off any shot out there which doesn't happen a lot."

Was there a key hole?
The 401-yard, par 4 17th hole, Riley sunk a 40-foot downhill putt and Vana knocked in his 15-footer for birdie, too. "I can't believe that I made that putt. I honestly have no idea how I made that and then to see Frank make his to come back was huge. He had started to build momentum at that point and had a better look than I did. It really got me off to a good track going into the afternoon."

What was it like to beat a player like Vana, a two-time champion and nine-time MGA Player of the Year?
"Winning the Amateur is special but to do it against someone whom you have such great respect for is amazing. He didn't have his "A" game at the start, but he had his game going for 20-something holes."

Life of Riley

It was fitting that new State Amateur Champion Ryan Riley of Norton CC met two-time defending champion John Hadges of Thorny Lea GC in the Round of 16. In that match between two Easton residents, Riley pulled an upset over Hadges with a 2 & 1 victory . . . The Boston Park League will hold the 12th Annual Dick Clegg Howie-Stein Memorial golf tournament on Monday, Aug. 1, at Easton Country Club. Shotgun start at 9:30 a.m. Entry fee is $125, which includes breakfast, green fees, cart, prizes and lunch. As a youngster, my father took my brother and me fishing at various locations, one of which was a local cranberry bog pond. Because of the need for water to circulate in and out of the cranberry bogs during the harvest season, many bog operations maintain a water storage holding pond for this purpose.

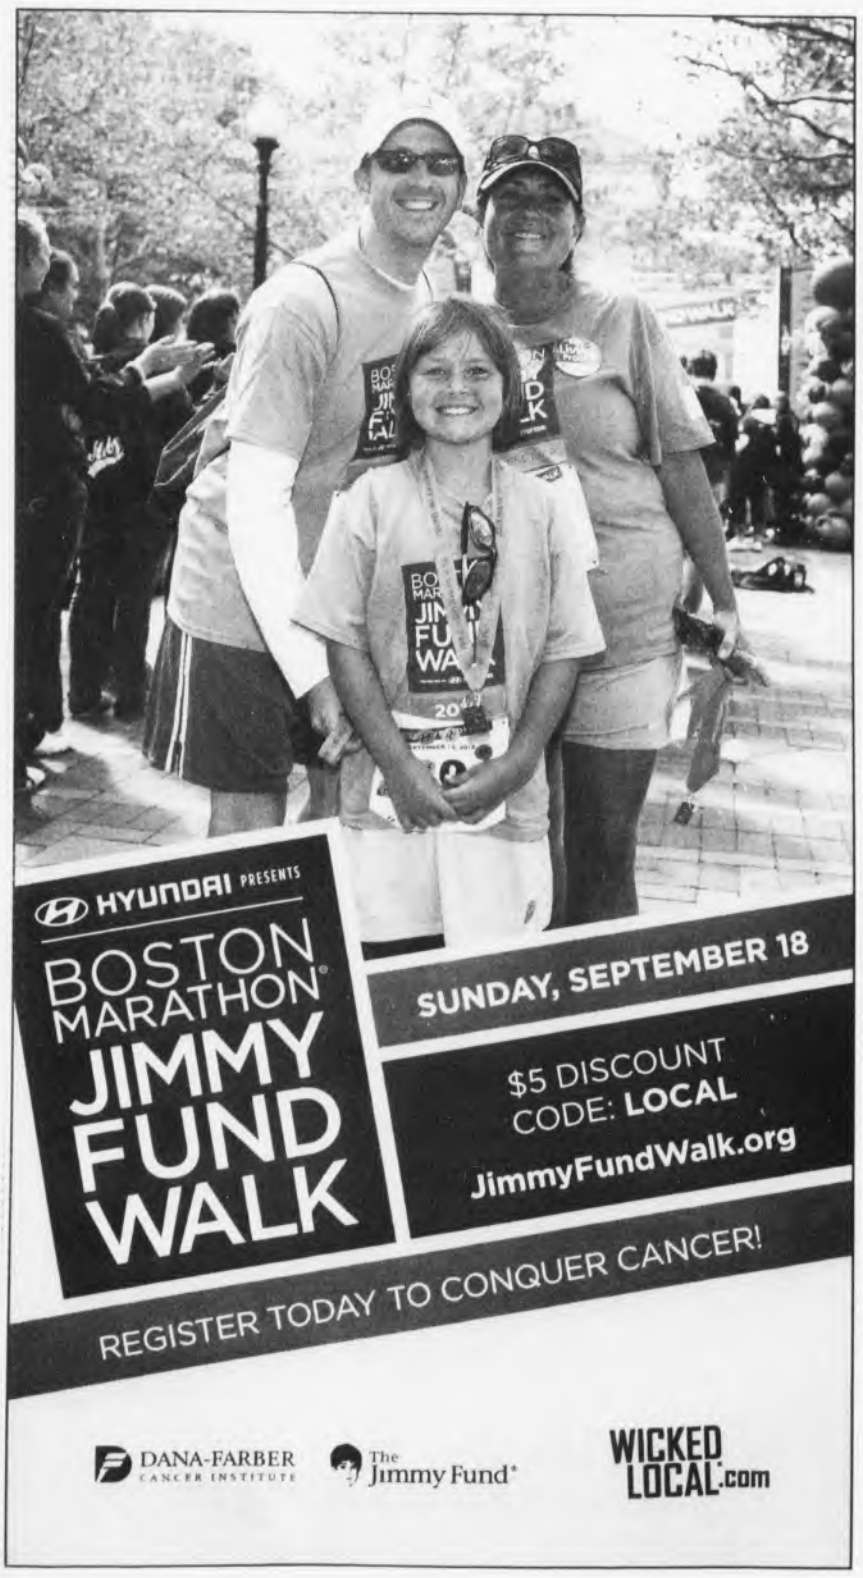
Most of these ponds are small in size, but for some reason, they often hold a reasonable number of decent sized bass in the two to five pound range. Some will hold a few over five. Maybe it is the limited access or the idea that the bog owners care about the water quality because their operation may depend on it. It might be that the smaller body of water creates a perfect balance for maintaining a plethora of small baitfish to feed the largemouth bass.

Whatever it is, every fly angler should consider a night of letting your fly line casually dance its rhythm on a summer evening at a cranberry bog pond in an arena where there is typically plenty of room for a backcast. The other advantage to the bog pond setting is that since they are typically small in size, there is no need to get all crazy geared up with the waders, vest, and every other tool and amenity that you own.

I usually throw on my home made tool lanyard, stick a fly box in my shorts pocket with just enough quantity and variation to get by, then grab my seven eight weight rod and head off for a casual cruise around the perimeter of the pond chasing a few largemouth bass. Much of the time is spent sight fishing, but often it involves the blind toss of a clouser, wooly bugger, or a deer hair bug or popper. The spun deer hair flies are my personal favorites because of the ability to visually and audibly experience the pleasure of the bass hammering the fly at the surface.

It would be a personal pleasure to provide a list of all the cranberry bog ponds that produce decent largemouth bass angling. However, if I advertise all of them, every bog owner will likely issue me a unilateral universal ban for life.



When approaching the bog angling arena, use your judgment when it comes to entering bog lands. Sometimes it is acceptable to walk in and get right to the angling business. Other situations may require asking for permission to access and fish the bog pond. I was denied access on one occasion in East Bridgewater last year, but I am sure the owner was grateful for my courtesy to his land.

During the cranberry depression that I often hear about that occurred twenty or thirty years ago or so, many of the bog owners sold their land to local conservation commissions because the price of the cranberry was dismally low. As a result, many of the cranberry bog ponds are open to the public and there is no need to be concerned about getting shot at with a salt pellet by a bog owner for trespassing, as was the case many years ago.

One such location is a pond off Elmer Street in Pembroke. Parking is available in front of a gate off Blueberry Lane as well. Because it is conservation land, this is the only location I can give up. My suggestion is to scour your map books or hop on Google Earth to peruse for some potential cranberry bog pond locations. Some of my favorites if you can find them on the map are in Hanson, Halifax, Plympton, and Pembroke. There are also many more in Middleboro, Carver, Kingston, Plymouth, and many of the surrounding towns on the South Shore where the cranberry bog business seemed to be centered over the years. Check out the maps for other potential cranberry bog bass ponds in your own local.

If the location seems legitimate or you received a tip that the bog owner was fine with fishermen using his land, get out there and get straight to the business. If the situation appears to require permission, be respectful of the land owner and ask.

Many bog owners are not bothered by the presence of fishermen as long as you do not litter and always respect their land.

Seeking teams

"We are looking to field teams in two divisions. A 13-14 and 18 age divisions in this end of the year tournament," said Tim Fox..

The tournament includes: Individual player team announcements by PA announcer Dan Curran, Singing National Anthem, " America the Beautiful" on the bagpipes, music, team playing t-shirts, snackstand, championship plaque, patch umpires, tourney mascot, and more.

The cost as usual is very low. Please contact me right away so we can pencil your team in again this year. Also, if you can send me information on the14 yo baseball coach in your town who would want to enter a team that would be great. Spread the word and sign up fast," added Fox, who can be reached at 781-534-3308 against some of the South Shore's best fast pitch softball pitchers. They have also taken full advantage of the league's more competitive rules and become aggressive base stealers and sliders. Defensively, the team has benefited from the skills of starting pitcher Sami Janssens, supported by the dependable closing skills of a number of team members. In addition, the hard working infield and outfield players have delivered many clutch defensive plays.

At the time of this article, the girl's record is 3-3 losses and are in fifth place out of 11 teams in their league. This is a great accomplishment for a team that is brand new to such a competitive league.

The next home game will be on Monday July 25 at 6 p.m. at Cohasset's Freedom Field.

Come out and watch the girls in action against teams from around the South Shore this summer.

PLAYOFF

clincher of the double-elimination set.

Cohasset was undefeated in the tournament and after Wednesday, is 5-0 this postseason.

Jeff Cavanaro, pitching for just the second time in the Legion season, went all nine innings, allowing just three runs on six hits.

He had help from catcher Conor Goetz, who hit a two-run bomb over the left field fence in the sixth, and an errorless effort from the field that included a beautiful running catch at the fence in center by Shane Haggerty.

"We knew coming in that we have a good team," Cavanaro said. "We build off each other. They have a good hitting team. I just wanted to keep them off balance and let my defense do the work. They did a great job."

Cavanaro found much of his success mixing his pitches, using a sharp curve to complement his fastball.

A key was throwing the fastball for strikes and a faith in the breaking stuff. He wasn't afraid to throw the hook behind in the count, and froze a few hitters with it.

"We know they're a fastball hitting team," Cavanaro said. "I wanted to keep them off balance. I have all the faith in the world in Conor. He stops everything. That's a great feeling."

Cavanaro, who was the winning pitcher in last year's Div. 4 State Championship game for Cohasset High School, said he's feeling a similar vibe to what the Skippers had while winning two state titles the last two years.

"We are getting that feeling," he said. "It's a tight knit group. This is the first time in history we've gone this far. It's a great feeling. The best."

Post 118 manager Greg Taylor was impressed, but not surprised with Cavanaro's performance.

"We have enough depth pitching that we can keep him at third base," Taylor said. "He's so good at third that we're better with him there. Tonight his curve was on and it set up the rest of his pitches."

This season, Taylor has a very deep group of pitchers including Casey Burns, Chase Michaud, Jamie Faber, Conor Goetz and Cavanaro.

"As a manager it makes things easier," Taylor said. With so many innings now, you use up pitching. It's nice having guys on the bench."

Getting the complete game from Cavanaro was a big help to get the rest of the staff rested before Saturday night's game at Hudson.

Dave Podurgiel gave Cohasset a 1-0 lead with an RBI double that scored Cavanaro in the bottom of the first.

Cohasset held a 1-0 lead heading into the fifth, when they added two runs on an RBI single by Anders Goetz, a single by Haggerty and an infield error that scored a run.

Braintree answered with two runs in the top of the sixth, but Conor Goetz answered that call with his two-run blast for a 5-2 lead.

Anders Goetz followed with another RBI single after a Braintree error and Cohaaset led 6-2.

"Braintree had just scored two," Taylor said. "Then Conor hits the home run. That was huge. Conor has been great. He's only 16. As a 16-year old you couldn't ask for more."

The past two seasons ended in frustration for Post 118, with the team watching the playoffs from the outside, partly do to weather and scheduling.

This year, they had their whole group together enough to win their way into the tournament, where general manager Scott Arnold said his team would shine if everyone were there.

This year they have been, and they are savoring it.

"I'm more nervous than they are," Taylor said. "The kids are just having fun playing baseball."

David Podurgiel started the outburst with a single and added a three-run homer in the same inning as Cohasset batted around.

Podurgiel finished with four hits for Cohasset.

Casey Burns picked up the win for Cohasset.

In the previous series, Cohasset played old fashioned baseball to advance.

"Basically," said Arnold of the Medfield series. "We used great pitching and solid defense in the two games. We had some fantastic defensive plays in the series. The only concern was that our bats were quiet, but we had some time before the sectionals.

"That was the big thing that we won in two games and we got complete games in both games and we were able to give our pitching some rest before the sectionals."

The two starters for Cohasset in the Medfield series, Chase Michaud in the first game and Casey Burns in the second game came through with complete game winning performances for Post 118.

Michaud was able to hold off Medfield and got late inning heroic support in Post 118's 5-4 come from behind win in Game-1. Burns was tough when he had to be as he pitched a complete game, 2-0 shutout in the second game that had the start delayed 40 minutes because of the weather.

"Casey was tough in the sixth inning," said Arnold. "They got the bases loaded with one out and he was able to get out of it without giving up a run. Casey pitched very well. Our defense was fantastic in the series. Our second baseman Anders Goetz turned a couple of big double plays. There were four long drives in the series, two to left that our leftfielder Shane Haggerty ran down at the wall and there were two to right that Tim Kensinger, our right fielder tracked down."

Post 118's offense provided some clutch hits in both games.

In the first game, Cooper Davis smacked a two-run single in the seventh inning to give Cohasset the win in the first game at home, 5-4.

Catcher Richard Roach in the second game came through with a two-run single that broke the scoreless tie and gave Post 118 the win and the series two game sweep.

"We are all pumped and it is a great group of kids that worked hard and came through," said Arnold.

THE ARTS

Music, artwork – what a wonderful night!

The musical portion of the evening was opened by the sixth grade band's rendition of Russian composer Mussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain," which "describes" a congregation of witches (and which was used in the film Fantasia).

KATHRYN HILLMAN

On Thursday June 9, Cohasset Middle School hosted its annual Middle School Arts Night. Artwork by students in all three grade was displayed the corridor near the art and music rooms, giving viewers an idea of the projects each grade has been working on over the course of the year. The sixth grade artwork included studies of hot and cool colors and pictures made up entirely of words. The seventh grade artwork included studies in perspective and 3-D papier-mâché figures. The eighth grade's artwork had samples of grid drawings (without the grid) and a single image depicted in a variety of ways through a composition. The artwork from each grade was excellent, and the display highlighted the progression of concepts and techniques from one grade to the next.

The musical portion of the evening was opened by the sixth grade band's rendition of Russian composer Mussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain," which "describes" a congregation of witches (and which was used in the film Fantasia). Opening with strong staccato chords, the brass moved to take on legato tones, while the winds continued to puncture the piece with accented beats. At the climax, the whole band came together and ended with a fade-out. The second piece, "The Magic Forest," opens with the winds and brass playing a round, until broken off into a flute soli. As the clarinets were layered on top of the flutes, the piece moved into an increasingly legato movement, with the drums clicking their sticks together for a "forest" sound effect. The brass came in during the last movement, creating a strong ending. The final piece, Pop Medley, included "Never Say Never" by Justin Bieber, "Buffalo Soldiers" by Bob Marley, and the theme from Hawaii Five-O. Each piece was highly distinct and very lively. The percussion section provided a steady, driving rock-beat, throughout the first song, supporting the band well. Buffalo Soldiers was strong, unified, and instantly recognizable, and Hawaii Five-O was particularly fun, with the brass carrying the melody well and the rest of the band providing strong harmonies. Overall, it was a fun piece, which received an enthusiastic response from the audience.

The seventh and eighth grade band recently competed in the Massachusetts State Band/Choral Competition, where they received an "excellent" rating. The band opened with one of the songs they performed at the competition, entitled Free Fall. The rising action of the piece immediately grabbed the audiences' attention, before the melody passed to the wind section, while the brass punctuated the piece with staccato beats, before reversing, putting the melody in the brass. The percussion kept up a lively beat, which grounded the legato tones of the winds and brass section, energizing the piece. The second piece, Selections from "The Dark Knight" was a medley taken from the score of the popular recent Batman movie. The reed section in particular provided the dark tones, which color this piece, with the drums driving it on with staccato rhythms. By the end of the piece, the melody line merges all the section together, creating a "wall of sound." Each piece was challenging, both in mechanics and tone, and the seventhand eighth grade band was well up the task.

The sixth grade chorus performed next, beginning with the ever-popular "Route 66," the pseudo-anthem of one of America's greatest highways. Accompanied by piano, the simple structure of the piece lent itself well to the large chorus, occasionally splitting between the soprano/alto section and the tenor/bass section, creating some interesting contrasts. The second piece, The Moon, was sung largely in a round, had a variety of subtle harmonies interspaced throughout the piece.

The final group to perform for the evening, the seventh and eighth grade chorus, which also received an "Excellent" rating in the Massachusetts Band/Choral Competition. The chorus began with Arirang, which opened with a flute duet, with piano added. The piece had a distinctly Asian tone to it, enhanced by flowing tones and complex four part harmonies. The chorus' second piece, "Windy Nights," highlighted each vocal section throughout the piece while maintaining a well-balanced harmony line. The final piece for the evening, "Waka Waka" (This Time for Africa), the official 2010 FIFA World Cup Song, and was performed by the sixth and seventh and eighth grade choruses. Despite the huge numbers, the piece was tight and well-coordinated, and managed the complex key changes with seeming ease.

Both bands and choruses were directed by John DeWaal, middle school band and chorus director. Mr. DeWaal has worked with about 320 of the 340 middle school students this year. Despite challenges, which can arise in coordinating large groups, Mr. DeWaal and the middle school students have done a commendable job with the musical program this year, as evidenced by both their high-ranking in the Massachusetts State Band/Choral Competition and this excellent concert.

Kathryn is a graduate of Notre Dame Academy and is studying art history at Fordham University.

Horoscope

SALOME'S STARS FOR RELEASE WEEK OF Aug. 1, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) A misunderstanding tests the temperament of the sometimes headstrong Aries. Instead of blowing your top, take time for a pleasant diversion while things cool down.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) A workplace problem could make the divine Bovine see red. But talk it out before you consider walking out. Some surprising facts emerge that change your earlier focus.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) You face a choice between ignoring your uneasy feelings about your relationship with that special person and demanding explanations. A close friend offers wise counsel.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) A change you'd been hoping for carries an unexpected complication. Stay the course, and things will work themselves out. Be sure to make time for family and friends.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Aspects favor spending time with loved ones. On the job, new ideas are generally welcomed. But some demands for changes could cause problems. Be ready to defend your choices.

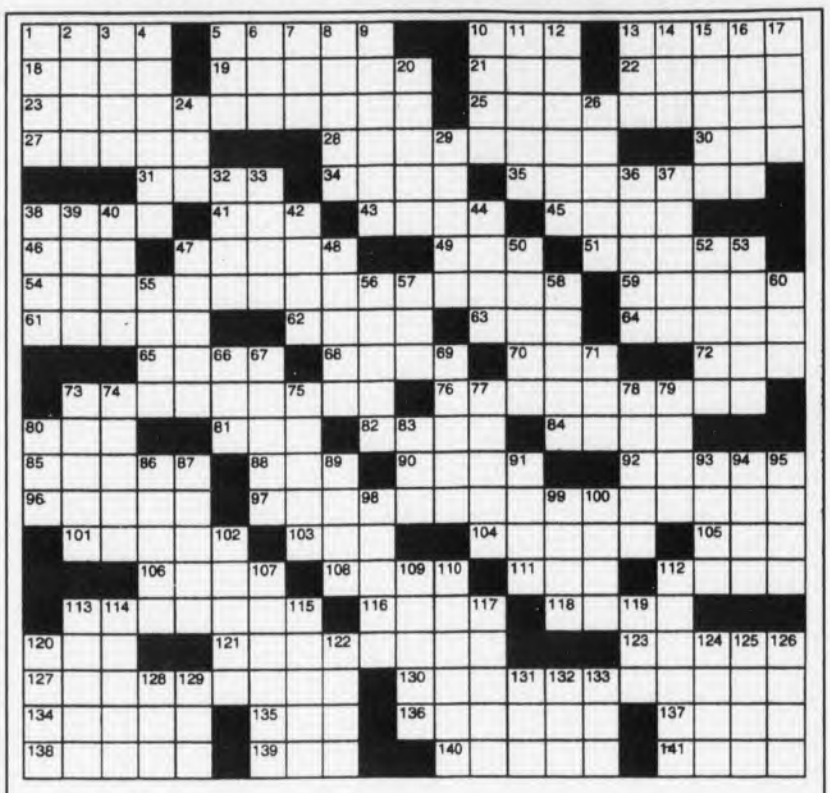
VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Good news: That workplace problem is close to being resolved with results that should please everyone. Take time off to indulge your love of fun and games.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Most of the time you are the most unflappable person around. But be ready to be thrown off-balance in the nicest way when Cupid takes aim in your direction.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) It's not often when someone tries to "sting" the sharp-witted Scorpion. But it can happen. Continue to be skeptical about anything that seems too good to be true.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Your strong sense of self-esteem helps you serve as a role model for someone who needs personal reassurances. Your efforts pay off in an unexpected way.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Someone close considers revealing a painful secret. Withhold judgment. Instead, open your generous heart, and offer dollops of your love and understanding.



AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Your talents as a peacemaker are called upon once more as an old problem re-emerges with new complications. Move cautiously in order to avoid falling into hidden traps.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Your artistic side is enhanced with the reception given to your new project. Use this success as encouragement toward fulfilling your larger goals.

(c) 2011 King Features Synd., Inc.

BORN THIS WEEK: Your natural sense of leadership is combined with a deep sense of responsibility. People trust you to give them both guidance and understanding.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

St. Stephen's Episcopal Church is an inclusive, Christ-centered community committed to exploring the intersection of our faith and our lives. We invite you to join us in this exploration on Sunday mornings and through a variety of special programs during the week. All are welcome to worship God with us at St. Stephen's!

This Sunday (July 24th) our summer schedule continues. We will have services at 7am and 9am instead of the usual 8am and 10am. The 7am service is at Sandy Beach in Cohasset. This wonderful service takes place with the gorgeous ocean backdrop and is truly a highlight of the summer. Our 9am service takes place in the church as usual.

Also, this Sunday, the 87th Annual Summer Carillon Concert Series continues. Come out to the Cohasset Common and listen to the Cohasset Carillon, beginning at 6pm. Our guest carillonneur this week isn't a guest at all, but our own Mary Kennedy, the carillonneur of St. Stephen's!

During the summer, our normal Godly Play and youth programs do not meet, but they will pick back up again when school begins in the fall. Instead, our more relaxed summer children's program, which meets at 9am on Sundays, is working on projects to help those in need in the surrounding community.

AA now meets four times a week at St. Stephen's: Sundays at 7 p.m., there is a Closed Big Book Study. Tuesdays there is a Women's step meeting at 6:30p.m. and a closed discussion meeting at 8 p.m. Fridays at 6:30 p.m. there is a Beginner's meeting. All meetings take place in the Watermelon Room at the church office.

Opinion

The emotional outrage displayed in last week's Mariner is understandable, given the human tendency to react to seeming injustice, combined with the human tendency not to bother with acquiring and making use of all relevant considerations.

CONSERVATION COMMISSION

Decision made on Cat Dam

Con Com approval comes after years of contention

By Mary Ford
mford@wickedlocal.com

Call it the calm after the storm.

In what could best be described as "anti-climatic," the Conservation Commission voted 4-0 on Monday to approve the NOI (Notice of Intent) for the operation of Cat Dam, supported by the Environmental-20, a powerful group of abutters to inner Little Harbor who believed their quality of life and property values were at stake. A NOI is a presentation of information to the Conservation Commission.

At the crux of the issue was how often to flush inner Little Harbor to maintain water levels, improve or maintain water quality and prevent the noxious odors that result when inner Little Harbor becomes a mudflat. Cat Dam is a tide gate mechanism with three gates that has been used to control the water flow for more than 100 years.

The E-20 group is concerned with leaving a water cover in inner Little Harbor for aesthetic and property value reasons. They believe sewering could clear up the water quality problems in Little Harbor.

The neighbors, who oppose the current NOI, advocate for increased flushing citing environmental concerns: increased algae blooms during the early summer and phragmite growth.

The deliberations lasted less than an hour and contained little discussion. Conservation Commission Chairman David Farrag explained to the audience that numbered about 30 in the sweltering

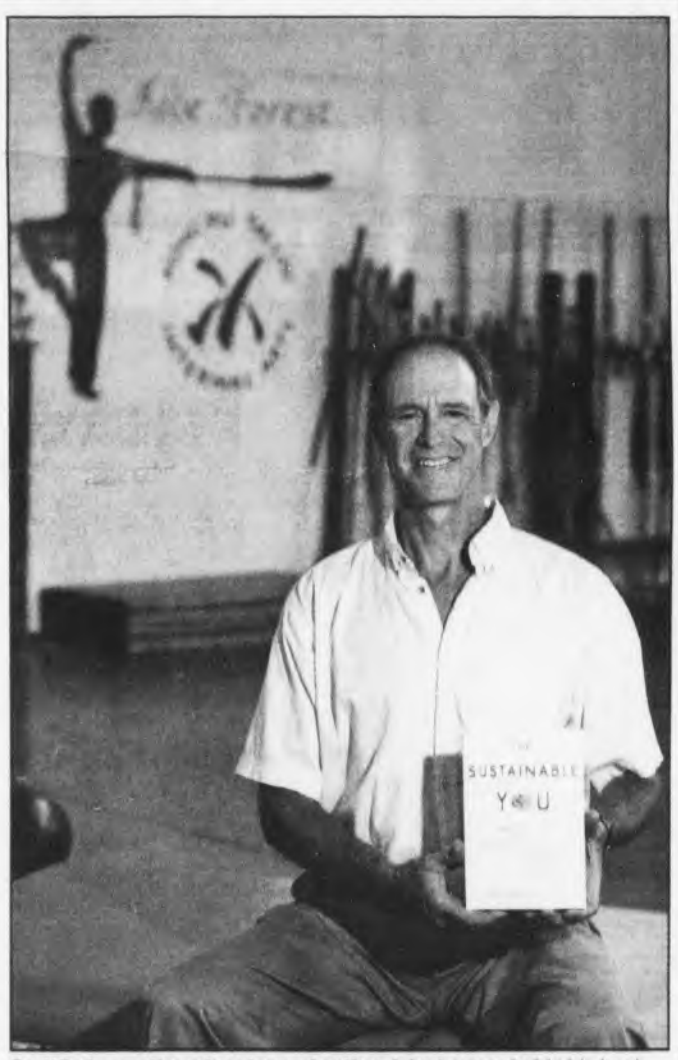
Local author tackles myth of aging

Says muscles can be flexible, pain free



By Glenda Garland
Special to the Mariner

Martial arts instructor John Loupos has seen plenty of people in pain, but not because he designs workouts to induce it. Instead the Cohasset resident and founder of Jade Forest Kung Fu stresses the personal development, human potential, and healing benefits of martial arts.

"A lot of people who come to martial arts come because their doctor sent them," Loupos said. Most often a doctor sends a patient to address muscular and joint issues.

Loupos found the perfect complement to the martial arts goal of personal development and healing in a relatively new approach called somatics, begun by a California man named Thomas Hanna. Loupos believes so firmly in the

Antolini accepts post in North Attleboro

By Mary Ford

When the doors to Cohasset Middle High School open for the new school year – there is still going to be a familiar face in the main office – but not in exactly the same place.

Dr. Michael "Mike" Gill will be moving from the assistant principal's office to the principal's office.

Superintendent Barbara Cataldo announced during Wednesday's School Committee meeting that current Principal Joel Antolini would be leaving Cohasset to become assistant superintendent of schools in North Attleboro. Antolini's last day will be Aug. 5.

Cataldo said Gill would serve as interim principal for the coming year. The

WHAT'S GOING ON?

West Nile makes Cohasset stop

EXTRA IN YOUR MARINER

Local results
The State Department of Public Health notified the Cohasset Board of Health last week that Cohasset has a positive mosquito pool for West Nile Virus (WNV) in the northwest part of town. Cohasset had one of 16 WNV positive pools out of 1310 tested statewide from July 17-23.
Cohasset Health Inspector Tara Tradd said the state is not recommending any restriction of outdoor activities. People are advised to take precautions including getting rid of standing water in the yard; repairing screens and taking personal precautions when outside at dusk including wearing long sleeves and applying insect repellent.

What is West Nile Virus (WNV)?
West Nile virus (WNV) is a mosquito-carried virus that can cause illness ranging from a mild fever to more serious disease like encephalitis or meningitis. It was first identified in the United States in 1999.

How is WNV spread?
WNV is most commonly spread to people through the bite of an infected mosquito. More information about different types of mosquitoes that can spread WNV can be found on the MDPH website at :www.mass.gov/dph/wnv.

Why don't I need to report dead birds anymore?
From 2000 to 2008, MDPH collected reports and ran tests for WNV on dead birds in Massachusetts as one of several ways to monitor WNV activity across the state. In recent years, this method has become less useful for finding the virus. Mosquito collection and testing gives the most reliable indication of current WNV activity and this is where monitoring activities will continue to be focused.

What are the symptoms of WNV?
The majority of people who are infected with WNV (approximately 80 percent) will have no symptoms. A smaller number of people who become infected (about 20 percent) will have symptoms such as fever, headache, body aches, nausea, vomiting, and sometimes swollen lymph glands. They may also develop a skin rash on the chest, stomach and back. Less than 1 percent of people infected with WNV will develop severe illness, including encephalitis or meningitis. The symptoms of severe illness can include high fever, headache, neck stiffness, stupor, disorientation, coma, tremors, convulsions, muscle weakness, vision loss, numbness and paralysis. Persons older than 50 years of age have a higher risk of developing severe illness.

How common is WNV in Massachusetts?
Because most people who are exposed to WNV have no symptoms, it is difficult to know exactly how many people have been infected. People who develop severe illness with WNV are most often reported. Between 2000 and 2010, 67 people were reported with WNV infection in Massachusetts. Six of these people died. Cases have been identified from around the state.

Stormwater Advisory Committee to meet

Cohasset Stormwater Advisory Committee will meet at 7 p.m., on Thursday, Aug. 4, at Town Hall. On the agenda that evening are two items:

• Recognize the work of the CSCR and in particular the recent work completed by Emily Castro, Maggie O'Grady, Ellie Tedeschi and their advisor Dr. Ann Thomae concerning Cohasset Harbor foam research.

• Invite Cohasset High School students or college students to participate in a one-month long internship during August 2011. The purpose of the internship will be to compile and catalogue all information concerning bacteria testing in Cohasset from any and all sources. The committee hopes to create a one source book of information spanning years of testing from many different departments and sources.

Trash talk at School Committee meeting

Board reviews draft procedures for pickups, recycling

By Mary Ford
mford@wickedlocal.com

School Committee meetings are not always about education and budgets. Sometimes they focus on the more mundane aspects of day-to-day life.

In an effort to be good neighbors, the School Committee reviewed draft procedures for trash handling at Cohasset Middle High School this week.

CMHS is on Pond Street in the middle of a residential neighborhood.

School board members plan to officially adopt the procedures once they hear from the Board of Health, school department business manager David DeGennaro said this week.

The Board of Health enforces town regulations for removal and transportation of trash that the school procedures need to mesh with.

"This all goes toward being a good neighbor."
Jeanne Astino, School Committee

School Committee member Jeanne Astino praised the draft describing it as a "really good effort."

"This all goes toward being a good neighbor," she said.

Under the draft procedures, trash pickup will occur when school is in session on Monday, Wednesday and Friday; recycling pickup will be on Wednesday.

When there is a Monday holiday, pickups will be Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday; with recycling on Thursday.

Pickup times will be after 8:30 a.m. and before 1 p.m. to ensure student safety.

The procedures also detail methods the hauler, Waste Management, must do to handle odor and possible leakage.

School personnel will make visual checks for odor and leakage after each pickup.

Sheriff Bellotti signs pact with DA

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti became one of the first corrections officials in Massachusetts to formalize a policy of procedures pertaining to a federal law aimed at eliminating sexual assault inside jails and prisons.

Bellotti and Norfolk District Attorney Michael Morrissey signed the memorandum of understanding as required under the provisions of the federal Prison Rape Elimination Act. The memorandum specifies procedures that must be followed if an inmate reports an assault.

"For too long, there has been a widespread misconception that corrections officials turn a blind eye to sexual assaults inside jail. Nothing could be further from the truth," said Bellotti, who also serves as president of the Massachusetts Sheriffs' Association. "This law creates a standard set of responses to various allegations so that they may be dealt with in a way that keeps justice as the foremost goal."

Morrissey said, "We take allegations of sexual assault seriously in any setting, and we commend the sheriff for recognizing his responsibilities and finalizing this agreement in advance of the federal law taking effect."

Earlier this spring, Norfolk County Sheriff's Office Superintendent Peter Perroncello led a training seminar for officers from the Norfolk and Suffolk County Sheriff's offices on the implementation of the new law at the local level.

"For too long, there has been a widespread misconception that corrections officials turn a blind eye to sexual assaults inside jail. Nothing could be further from the truth."
Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti

PREA was passed in 2003, but has not been fully implemented because Congress determined there should be a lengthy period of public comment on how best to administer the law. The measure is expected to take effect this fall. PREA is the first federal civil law ever passed to address sexual violence inside correctional facilities. It includes provisions for accumulating reporting data so that the problem can be monitored in the most effective manner.

"Our goal as corrections professionals is to ensure that convicted offenders abide by the law in all circumstances, without exception," Bellotti said. "The PREA law will help us do that."

POLICE BEAT

Baby call believed to be a hoax

By Mary Ford
mford@wickedlocal.com

At 11:15 p.m. on Monday (July 25), Cohasset Police received a call on their business line from a young woman, who claimed to be asking for help because she had just had a baby behind the gas station in the village. The dispatcher kept the caller on the line as police and firefighters were sent to the town parking lot but could not find anyone. The woman then reported she was lying down in the alleyway beside the gas station. She was moaning in pain but dispatch could not hear a baby crying. She reported that she was sick and the baby was sick. Police continued to search the area for over an hour and called in assistance from the Scituate K-9 unit.

Cohasset Police notified area towns to check their gas station areas and police also called South Shore, Quincy and Jordan hospitals to see if anyone had just given birth.

Police thought the call could be a hoax; but they still checked the tracks and checked all dumpsters and trash receptacles. No woman and baby were located. Police also thought the incident might have been a ruse to tie them up while a crime was taking place. They sent cruisers to check businesses along Route 3A to be sure there was no suspicious activity.

Police have turned the matter over to the detectives who are investigating and are in contact with Verizon about tracing the call. They were unable to trace the call Monday because it came in on the business line. Had it come in on the 9-1-1 line, it could have been traced immediately, police said.

(An audio of a portion of the call is online at: www.wickedlocalcohasset.com

Jewelry stolen

Police are investigating the possibility that landscape workers entered a home where they were doing yard work and stole about $9,000 in jewelry last week. At 5:15 p.m. on Wednesday (July 20) a 59-year-old Ledgewood Drive woman, who had hired a landscaping company, reported when she came home she saw mud and boot prints in her house. She then discovered that several pieces of jewelry were missing. Detectives responded, are following up and have two suspects in mind, police said.

Solicitors

Police received a complaint on Monday (July 18) at about 12:08 p.m. about door-to-door solicitors. It turned out to be a group of Jehovah's Witnesses. Religious groups and nonprofits are exempt from the town bylaw requiring solicitors to register with police. The Jehovah's Witnesses were allowed to continue on their way.

Police spokesman Lt. William Quigley said the solicitation bylaw in Cohasset has been highly successful in discouraging the amount of door-to-door solicitation that plagued the town before the bylaw was adopted. About half-a-dozen people have registered with the police this year and they are mostly from local businesses selling coupons and discount books.

Under the town bylaw, solicitors are required to register with the police where they can apply for a $25 license. They are required to wear a badge issued by the police that includes their name and photograph. In addition solicitors have to provide police with their name, address, date of birth and height, weight and eye color, social security number; dates and times of canvassing activities; name and address of employer; and a brief description of the purposes of the solicitation.

Exceptions to the bylaw are town, state or federal officers or employees on official business; minors under 18 unless in connection with a commercial activity; candidates for public office or campaign workers; those promoting political causes and those soliciting for charitable organizations unless those solicitors are paid.

MVAs

• At 1:47 p.m. on Tuesday (July 19), police responded to a two-car accident near Leo's Gulf station on Chief Justice Cushing Highway. Police said a 79-year-old Scituate woman operating a 2006 Toyota RAV4 was headed north when she attempted a left-hand turn into a business on 3A. She crossed over the southbound lane and failed to yield to a 2003 Chevrolet Impala that hit her broadside. A 51-year-old Weymouth man operated the Impala. There were no injuries and neither vehicle was towed. The Scituate woman was cited for failure to yield to oncoming traffic.

• At 8:28 a.m. on Wednesday (July 20), police responded to a rear-end accident on Route 3A. Police said a 2001 Ford pickup truck, operated by a 17-year-old Hingham woman "rear-ended" at 1998 Jeep Grand Cherokee, operated by a 24-year-old Hingham man. Both vehicles were headed south when the accident occurred. Police said the 17-year-old said she was distracted and not paying attention; she was cited for following too closely. The pickup was towed. There were no injuries.

Possum

At 9:13 a.m. on Monday (July 18) a Margin Street resident reported that a possum had crawled up next to the house. The Animal Control Officer responded, picked up the animal and took it to the dump where it was destroyed and buried. Police said any sick wild animal is potentially rabid.

iPhone

On Monday (July 18) a 41-year-old Cohasset woman reported her teenage son lost his iPhone3 at the Sailing Club on Government Island. She reported it to police for insurance purposes.

Text message

A 55-year-old Cohasset woman reported last week that she had received an obscene text message. The message consisted of words only, no photos, police said. She was advised to block that number from her phone.

Dogs restrained

In response to a complaint, the Animal Control Officer ordered the owner of three Dobermans on Stockbridge Street last week to restrain the dogs. The dogs are new to the neighborhood.

Money clip

A 58-year-old Hull man went to the police station on Saturday (July 23) to report losing his money clip with $200 in cash at the Music Circus the night before. He hoped that someone had turned it in but that was not the case.

Memories
Greg Meallo recently shared his story with us:

"I was a Music Circus usher from 1974-1977 during my high school years. For many of us this was our first job. Each night Music Circus producer Ron Rawson would walk the grounds wearing a safari hat and inspect everything to ensure that everything was just right. Buses of patrons would arrive for the popular shows and applaud from the moment the entertainers arrived until the final encore, all the while fanning themselves with their programs.

"I remember Mac Davis who was not only a great singer but a real country gentleman. Steve Lawrence and Edie Gorme would sell out. They had a natural style that was infectious. They made 2,252 people feel special for 2 hours on a summer evening.

"Tony Orlando and Dawn sold out quickly. They were terrific performers. By the fifth show I could recite all the lines of their songs.

"I was very lucky to work at the Music Circus. Where else can one have a job that brings nothing but smiles and happy memories 35 years later.

ENOUGH WATER NOW BUT

Water conservation is advised

By Carol Britton Meyer
cmeyer@cnc.com

Aquarion Water Company has no immediate plans to invoke mandatory water restrictions, but customers are advised to take steps to conserve water whenever possible.

Director of Operations Robert Roland said that while there has been a slight drop in demand since the company called for voluntary reductions in water consumption for homeowners and companies who water their lawns through irrigation systems, "the ones that are left running every night remain our biggest concern."

Aquarion urges all of its customers in Hingham, Hull, and north Cohasset to conserve water. "We hope to keep the supply adequate through continued conservation," Roland said. "We still have the month of August, which historically is not a heavy rainfall month, ahead of us, and unless the demand on the water supply goes down, we may have to look at the next level of restrictions."

The next step would be for Aquarion to call for mandatory odd-even restrictions, based on house numbers, which would mean watering every other day, only with handheld watering devices between 6 and 9 p.m. The use of irrigation systems and sprinklers would be banned.

In the meantime, Aquarion has posted some 18 signs urging Hingham, Cohasset, and Hull irrigation system users to use water wisely. This means limiting the use of irrigation systems to no more than two days a week, before 6 a.m. and after 6 p.m., and ensuring that the systems are operating properly.

The water company also sent letters to about 20 contractors who install irrigation systems to remind them of the voluntary restrictions. "We really don't want to go to an odd-even system, because this requires policing on our part and neighbors reporting neighbors," Roland said. "We haven't experienced a lot of rainfall in July, but we have been able to meet the demand and pressure on the system based on the voluntary restrictions."

Although the water supply is currently in good shape considering the lack of precipitation, Aquarion will continue to monitor the situation closely day by day. "It's a real challenge," Roland said. "We're hoping for some rain soon."

He further suggested that irrigation system contractors and homeowners or companies with irrigation systems or who are planning to install one refer to the irrigation.org website. The Irrigation Association is a leading membership organization for irrigation companies and professionals. The focus is on promoting efficient irrigation and long-term sustainability of water resources for future generations.

Roland also recommended referring to the greenscapes.org website. The Greenscapes Massachusetts program is geared toward educating citizens and professionals about landscaping practices, including irrigation and chemical use, in order to lessen impacts on the environment. The goal is to encourage citizens to act as environmental stewards in their own backyards. The effort also promotes responsible management of water resources.

Aquarion has partnered with Greenscapes in the past to offer environmentally friendly planting ideas and free irrigation audits.

Water-saving tips

Aquarion Water Company is urging all its customers to use water wisely.

Director of Operations Robert Roland offered some water-saving tips recently:

- Run washing machines and dishwashers only with a full load;
- Turn water off while shaving or brushing your teeth;
- Use blowers or brooms instead of a hose for clearing sidewalks and driveways of debris;
- Water prior to sunrise and after sundown to minimize evaporation;
- Water only grass, gardens, and plantings, not the pavement;
- If considering installing an irrigation system, think about including a rain sensor/soil moisturizer analyzer to avoid over-watering, which can be harmful to grass and shrubs and wastes water;
- Fix leaky toilets, outdoor showers, and inside and outdoor faucets to save on the water bill and to use this precious resource wisely.

For further information and more water conservation tips, call the Aquarion Customer Service Department at 1-800-928-3734 or visit aquarion water.com basement meeting room at Town Hall that no more information would be allowed and that the audience should maintain decorum with no cheering or jeering.

CAT DAM

The NOI decision comes in the wake of years of controversy over how to address the health of inner Little Harbor that divided neighbors and ultimately the Board of Selectmen. In an unprecedented action two weeks ago, Selectmen (in a majority 3-2 vote) did not reappoint three long-time members of the Conservation Commission whose terms were up. The trio of Conservation Commission members, Debbie Cook, Sarah Charron and Dick Karoff, had been participating in the Cat Dam NOI public hearing and had expected to be reappointed and be able to deliberate on the NOI.

Their surprise "not reappointments" left the NOI decision up to the incumbent four members of the commission: chairman David Farrag, Veneta Roebuck, Ed Graham and Jack Creighton.

The three newly appointed members – James Marten, Alex Koines, and James Gilman — could not participate because they had not been on the commission during the public hearing, according to the town bylaw. In any case, Marten would have had to recuse himself as an abutter and member of the E-20.

The unseated Karoff, who accepted appointment as an associate member, could participate in the deliberations Monday but not vote, as is the case with associate members.

The three selectmen, Fred Koed, Leland Jenkins and Paul Carlson, who voted not to reappoint the incumbent Conservation Commission members whose terms were up, were in attendance. Also present were former selectmen Ralph Dormitzer, who supported the current NOI, and Karen Quigley, who many believe, lost reelection last spring largely due to her opposition to the current NOI.

There was at least one thundercloud raised during Monday's "calm" that could have reverberations down the line in terms of the precedent issue. Creighton, one of the commissioners who deliberated and voted, said in his remarks that selectmen and ultimately politics had been dragged into resolving the issue, costing one selectman reelection.

Quigley said in an interview Tuesday that emails clearly show she was targeted in the election by the E-20 for her positions against both their NOI and the Board of Selectmen's actions in withdrawing the Town's NOI. (See sidebar)

"Coupled with Selectmen's recent firing of qualified commissioners and their replacement with individuals with conflicts of interest and personal agendas, it demonstrates this small group of citizens has unwarranted influence over elected officials and that there is no place in our town government for differing opinions," she said.

Creighton did note that the NOI provides considerably more exchange of water than is currently the case and that an advisory committee would be in place to oversee the tide gate operations. Creighton said he hoped the town could move forward with a delineated, workable plan and "have one less divisive issue pitting neighbor against neighbor."

There was also a bolt of lightning during the deliberations when Karoff accused one of the E-20 group of allegedly calling him a liar and threatening to expose him in the press as such. The verbal altercation occurred in the parking lot following last week's Conservation Commission meeting, he said.

In a brief interview following Monday's deliberations, Karoff explained his outburst. He said he had misspoken during the now infamous July 12 Selectmen's meeting (when the reappointments did not happen) in telling Selectmen he had only been on the commission for three years. Karoff was appointed as a full member in 2005. That misstatement formed the basis for the "liar" accusation, he said.

Reached for comment on Tuesday, Richard O'Connell, 249 Jerusalem Road, who represents one of about 12 families who abut Little Harbor, Richardson's Brook and Peck's Meadow — and oppose the current NOI — said Karoff's comments about receiving threats from a member of the E-20 group is a worrisome indication of the breakdown of civility and procedure in the town that all citizens should be concerned about.

O'Connell, who was in attendance at Monday's meeting, also said the NOI that was approved by the commission is a marginal improvement at best over the previous procedure.

"The reviews by several agencies received by the Conservation Commission indicate that it will not satisfy requirements of the Mass. Wetlands Protection Act," he said.

O'Connell also said the NOI commits the town to continuing expense in the future: for repair, maintenance and possible replacement of the dam, and for operation of the dam.

Tom Killilea of the E-20 group praised Monday's decision. "I think it was a good decision, it was the right answer and should have been reached a long time ago."

Farrag, the chairman of the Conservation Commission, said the town now has "something tangible:" a codified, permitted schedule in place for Cat Dam. The NOI will be in place for three years; it can be amended and/or extended. Monday's decision can also be appealed, he said. He explained that the commission consulted with Town Counsel before Monday's deliberations to be sure they were clear in terms of procedural issues. He was pleased that the new members did not try to jump into the deliberations.

Farrag said the Conservation Commission saw this project from every angle and this NOI had more information than anything the commission has tackled before.

He said now it was time for the Conservation Commission to move forward and do what they are supposed to do: "Enforce the Wetlands Protection Act at the local level."

Cat Dam in brief

- It's been more than three years since the first time Selectmen hosted a discussion on the current operation of the town-owned Cat Dam – the tide gate mechanism on Nichols Road that limits tidal flow in inner Little Harbor.
- The purpose of the tide gates at Cat Dam is to permit flushing with fresh seawater to avoid stagnation and keep the inter-tidal mudflat along the bottom of ILH from becoming exposed during low tides which otherwise cause a very noxious odor.
- In 2008, Town Meeting approved spending for an engineering study of Cat Dam and the surrounding area with the end result being brought forward to the Conservation Commission as a Notice of Intent (NOI). A NOI is presentation of information to the Conservation Commission that, in this case, addresses the operation and maintenance of the tide gates, among other things.
- The town paid for the consulting engineer to develop the Notice of Intent at a cost of $17,000.
- In late October, a majority of the Selectmen voted to withdraw the Notice of Intent (NOI) application that was before the Conservation Commission.
- After several more lengthy discussions on the issue, a majority of selectmen voted to send a new NOI, one that had been prepared and paid for by a neighbor group, dubbed the Environmental 20. The E-20 Group consists of property owners that live in the immediate vicinity of ILH who are concerned how erratic changes in the operation of the Cat Dam Tide Gate could have negative ramifications to ILH and the quality of life and habitat that currently exist.
- Selectmen Paul Carlson, Fred Koed and Leland Jenkins voted to withdraw the NOI application from the Conservation Commission and voted in favor of the NOI sponsored by the E-20. The three also voted not to reappoint three Conservation Commissioners at the July 12 Selectmen's meeting.

MIKE GILL

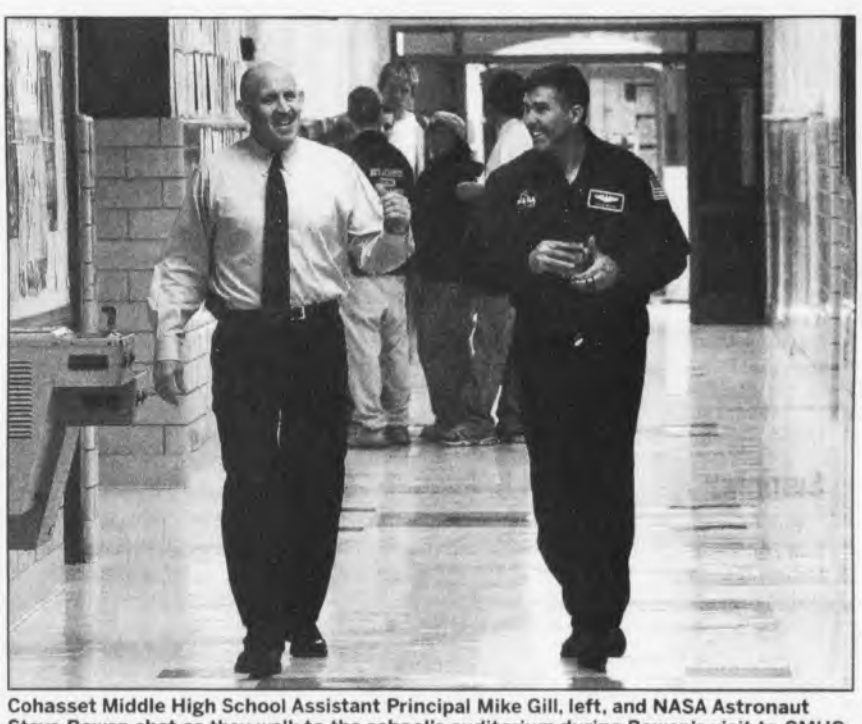
Supt. Barbara Cataldo announced during Wednesday's School Committee meeting that current Principal Joel Antolini would be leaving Cohasset to become assistant superintendent of schools in North Attleboro.

school department will look both internally and externally to fill the position of assistant principal, she said. The search for a new principal will start in January.

School Committee Chairman Helene Lieb congratulated Gill on the interim appointment. Gill was in attendance at Wednesday's meeting to present the 2011-2012 School Improvement Plan.

Gill, who has worked in Cohasset schools for 31 years, proved to be a quick study as Antolini, not Gill, had served on the School Improvement Council that drafted the plan. Gill provided the School Committee with an overview of the highlights of the plan's goals and objectives.



Antolini took over at the helm of Cohasset Middle-High School July 1, 2005. Before accepting the Cohasset post, he had been serving as principal of Holbrook Junior/Senior High School.

It was not Antolini's first time in Cohasset. Earlier in his career (1991-1995), Antolini taught technology education in Cohasset and was also the track coach.

Antolini, who was selected from a field of 32 applicants for the North Attleboro job, is the second principal to leave Cohasset this year. Osgood Principal Janet Sheehan stepped down at the end of the school year to accept a position in Milton.

Sharon Bellao, who was hired as the new Osgood principal, is already on board. Bellao recently held the position of principal at Forestdale School, which serves kindergarten through eighth grade in East Sandwich, Mass.

Gill replaced long-time assistant principal Jack DeLorenzo in 2004. Before that Gill served as the health education coordinator for Cohasset schools for many years.

Award-winning jewelry designer is a gem

Makes statement the organic way

By Sara Hollingshead
shollingshead@wickedlocal.com

Andrea Williams lives her life by the guideline, "leave something better than you found it." As a jeweler and owner of Bound Earth, a contemporary jewelry design studio in Cohasset, this can be tricky, Williams explains, but her commitment to creating socially and environmentally responsible jewelry pushes her to seek new ways to create her unique yet award-winning jewelry.

Recently awarded First Prize in the international Saul Bellow Design Awards (bead category), Williams is a one-of-a-kind jeweler. Named after the founder of the Rio Grande jewel distributor, the Saul Bellow Design Awards recognizes artists whose work challenges traditional perceptions of jewelry design.

Williams says winning First Prize in the Saul Bellow Design Awards and the overall success she has received throughout the past few years is "overwhelming. It feels good to design the way I want to and is important to me. I enjoy being able to actually show people it's possible to create jewelry without using mined diamonds. You can wear jewelry created the naturally organic way and still make a statement."

Five years ago, Williams made an ethical commitment to herself and her work and swore off mined gems because of the damage mining gems cause to the environment and society; "My son is showing the same fascination with nature that I exhibited at his age and to further damage his world would be unconscionable. After all, what good is composting my kitchen scraps if through my work I were to contribute to environmental or social disaster elsewhere?" Now, Williams relies on reclaimed metal and lab-grown gems to help create her unique pieces of art.

Creating a piece of jewelry is a time-consuming process, Williams explains, because each piece is hand done and unique. Williams finds many of the rocks she uses to create her pieces of jewelry along the beaches and sorts them in her workshop by size, color, and shape and waits for the exact design to come to mind. Then, with a design in mind, Williams sets to work, carving the design into the rock and inlaying metal into the stone and then sanding the metal into level of stone.

Williams is frequently challenged by her work, as she "tries to keep it fresh and often looks for new ways to push the material she is working with in a new and different direction while also honoring where the material came from." Williams further explains her designs and said she "looks at other artists' and jewelers' work and tries to find another path and seeks out a way to make her work completely unique."

Williams' workshop is set up in an old renovated barn, adding to her collection of chickens, bees and a vegetable garden, creating a picturesque yard. Her house and yard also yield to her eco-conscious ideals, her house, designed by a green architect is powered by renewable energy and her yard is not covered in grass, but rather landscaped with things that don't require the extra work like mowing and watering.

Her home and lifestyle fit into her ideal life guideline, to leave things better than you found them, but she says her lifestyle is still evolving and improving, just like her jewelry.

Williams' studio at 58 Doane St. is open to the public by appointment. For more information, visit boundearth.com

Andrea hollowed out this beach stone and filled it with rare earth magnets to make this unique necklace. She also used reclaimed sterling silver and gold in the piece.

benefits of somatics that he's written and published a new book on the subject: "The Sustainable You, Somatics and the Myth of Aging."

"There is only one book on somatics prior to Thomas Hanna's untimely passing, so I saw there was a hole that needed to be filled."

Loupos explained that somatics uses movement and mental feedback to provide people with better control over their muscles, resulting in loss of pain, improved mobility, strength, and flexibility, and stress relief. But Loupos stressed that, "Somatics is not New Agey or a religion. You can't think through it without doing the proper mechanics."

In Loupos's book, he writes that most muscle and joint problems arise from what he calls insults that have happened over the years. These insults include responses we make to traumas, such as favoring an ankle we sprained or an arm we broke long after it's healed, to moderate and mild traumas that include the way we hold ourselves to negotiate a city street, or to see out of bifocals. Since muscles are designed to contract, these insults cause our muscles to increase tightness. As we hold our muscles the same way day after day, they get pressed into place. It's sort of the same process commonly called developing "muscle memory." Loupos, however, says that memory doesn't come from the muscles as much as the neural circuitry that grows to facilitate repetitive actions.

"This is the myth of aging," Loupos said, "that pain and stiffness are built in as we get older. They're not built in, but a response to injuries that's learned."

Somatics teaches a person how to change his or her neural circuitry to override that action. By doing so, a person can gain better control his or her muscles and prevent stiffness and pain from creeping back in.

Certified somatics educator John Loupos performs an assisted pandiculation on David Cahill. John has been practicing somatics since 2004 and says it helps resolve pain issues and increase the range of motion. STAFF PHOTO/ROBIN CHAN

"This is the myth of aging that pain and stiffness are built in as we get older. They're not built in, but aresponse to injuries that's learned."

John Loupos

Loupos came to somatics through personal experience. He injured his shoulder, and although he tried all sorts of therapies, he was still in pain a year later. "I have a healthy respect for mainstream medicine," he said, "but I have also moved into other modalities."

He went to see a practitioner of somatics in Northampton. "It took one session, and it solved that," he said.

As Loupos learned more about somatics, he was surprised to find that there were so few practitioners, only about 200 in the country. He decided that he would also become a certified Hanna somatic educator and a clinical somatic educator. While studying, he started writing down thoughts and impressions. That was in 2005. In a couple years, he realized he had a book in him about the subject.

Writing books isn't new to Loupos. He has written three books on tai chi. "I'm always looking for some way to get what I'm doing into words." He consulted with doctors and Ph.D.s and drew on his training psychology, as well as his 45 years of experience as a martial arts instructor. He presented many of his ideas to the Tai Chi Enthusiasts Festival in Pennsylvania in 2009 and was rewarded this year with an Enthusiasts Choice Award for the most interesting presentation.

Publishing the book on somatics, however, presented a new challenge. "With the first three books, publishing was a breeze," Loupos said. "I went with a martial arts publisher. But I didn't want to pigeonhole this book that way. Although I often integrate somatics into my martial arts warm-ups and cool-downs, somatics is broader than martial arts. In the end I decided to go the self-publishing route."

He's excited about getting so much information out there to help people, and is hopeful more people will find somatics useful to relieve pain and increase mobility. "I'm getting a great response so far. People are telling me it's very readable and informative."

If you're interested in learning more about somatics, Loupos is holding a seminar on Sunday, August 21st, from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. You can contact him through Jade Forest Kung Fu.

OUR VIEW

Cursive, no more?

We recently learned that Indiana is joining a host of other states where cursive will no longer be taught to schoolchildren. The plan is to eliminate cursive so children can focus on becoming better at keyboard use.

Let's face it — handwriting is becoming a lost art for adults as well. Texting via Blackberries, iPhones and other devices, as well as email, are replacing sending messages the old-fashioned way.

Many of you, we are confident in saying, have probably sent or received a birthday card or other greeting via email. Not an email message from a friend but an "e-card." The e-card does not require a signature, which is still the case with cards bought at the store.

Here at the Mariner, we still receive the occasional letter or news release written by hand in cursive. Some of the handwriting is just beautiful — a real art.

We are saddened that school districts around the country — with more to follow, no doubt — are eliminating cursive from their curriculum. To us, it is not just the skill that is lost but also the attention to detail. Learning cursive taught us to use lines and spacing carefully.

Our fourth-grade teacher back in the day at Wampatuck Elementary School in Scituate used to put a massive long division problem on the blackboard before she "went to see a man about a horse." That was Miss O'Hern's way of saying she was headed to the teacher's lounge for a cigarette.

All of us stayed in our seats and worked on that long division problem. While it was partly about math, it was also about lining up the columns and paying close attention to detail.

Call us old-fashioned, but details are important! We are amazed today at the documents received — even from law firms that should know better — with mistakes. Often people are using a template and forget to change something — like the person's name — before sending it out.

What would it have been like if cursive had been eliminated before the Declaration of Independence was signed? John Hancock's signature would not have been the largest and the expression "Put your John Hancock right here" would never have come to be.

Think of all the historic documents over the centuries composed by hand!

Handwriting used to also tell something about a person's character. Handwriting analysis is apparently also going to be passé.

We cannot imagine a future without handwriting. We have to hope that cursive will make a comeback and that educators will see its value.

Watched last shuttle landing

I really enjoyed last week's Mariner article on Steve Bowen's role in the last shuttle mission. My name is Charlie Lindgren. I taught eighth grade Earth/Space science for 41 years at the Gates Intermediate School in Scituate, and ended my career as the K-12 Science Coordinator.

When I retired I was blessed by getting a job as an educational consultant with NASA at the Johnson Space Center. I am working with a Principal Investigator (PI), three other teachers, and numerous scientists on a project called Expedition Earth and Beyond where students create original research questions using astronaut photography from the Shuttle or International Space Station. Students send their proposals into Johnson Space Center, and if accepted, an astronaut on the ISS will take a photograph to help with their research. Most of this is done through teleconferences, but once a week we all come together in Houston.

Last week was that week! In addition to doing our regular work, we also joined the thousands of NASA employees at the Space Center to watch the landing. We also went to Ellington Airport and joined thousands of people in a huge hanger to greet the astronauts when they returned to Houston. It was an amazing, bittersweet week. Charlie Lindgren, 344 North Main St.

What happened to Cedar Street paving?

The following letter was sent to the Cohasset Town Manager and a copy was provided to the Cohasset Mariner.

Some (many) months ago, there was a very brief memo published in the Cohasset Mariner stating we would be seeing repaving (not resurfacing) of Cedar Street as well as North Main Street, from the train station to Forest Avenue.

What happened? Where are you?

It is now almost the first of August, and probably the worst and one of the most used streets in Cohasset goes unattended.

Who uses Cedar Street?

1. Every town vehicle and snowplow!
2. Every school bus 10 months of the year!
3. All of the extra heavy dump container trucks!
4. Every citizen who goes to the dump, and last and it seems, the most least, the citizens who live on Cedar Street!

This road is a shame. The potholes and patches are dangerous. I am requesting this letter be published in the Mariner and your answer be published as well before the "snow flies," and we have to endure another miserable year.

Jerusalem Road, Atlantic Avenue, Nichols Road as well as some other streets, seem to be quite smooth. Since when did the residents on Cedar Street become second-class citizens? Thomas J. Myers, 5 Cedarledge Village

COMMENTARY

Cat Dam and democracy

MURRAY CAMPBELL

Mother Nature is not even handed, and often provides us with unsatisfactory features that can be improved by the intelligence that humans are blessed with.

Several correspondents, and the Editor, imply that democracy was subverted by replacement of three appointed (not elected) members of the Conservation Commission, instead of automatically reappointing them. It is naïve to attribute the selectmen's action solely to cronyism. No doubt the selectmen were informed of some perceived excesses and would have replaced some ConCom members previously had there been any applicants. When presented with an opportunity for corrective action, the majority was willing to accept the inevitable storm of criticism

The emotional outrage displayed in last week's Mariner is understandable, given the human tendency to react to seeming injustice, combined with the human tendency not to bother with acquiring and making use of all relevant considerations.

Mother Nature is not even handed, and often provides us with unsatisfactory features that can be improved by the intelligence that humans are blessed with. Surely responsible environmentalism includes taking advantage of this intelligence, rather than accepting nature's flaws. Unfortunately, some zealots take the opposite view, and their passion too often trumps the passivity of the rest of us.

The environment around Inner Little Harbor has been changed by good management of the Cat Dam gates from unbearably odiferous in the summer months to tolerable. Sure, the gates probably resulted from the wishes of developers to improve the salability of building lots in the area. But whatever the motivation, the environment was improved, not degraded. Most, probably all, properties have changed hands more than once, and the current owners should not be penalized by those who would pervert "environmentalism" by rendering the gates useless.

For most of its history, the US has been outrageously neglectful of its environment, except for a determined few to whom we can credit our great national parks. Environmental concern and the consequent birth of government agencies a half-century ago have replaced carelessness with laudable determination to preserve the environment and to restrain offenders. Unfortunately, the noble goals have morphed into environmental extremism, and loaded our federal and state agencies with individuals whose purist agendas have little space for reasonable considerations of cost, practicality, and human impact. The federal EPA, in particular, has become a problem rather than a blessing to the nation, and seems almost beyond the control of our democratically elected Congress. Environmental agencies of the states suffer the same distortions, and municipal agencies are hard pressed not to fall in line. Nevertheless, whether appointed or elected, our local representatives should not

Soil is foundation of culvert work

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Bound Brook Project — In a past article we mentioned that there would be some work on Beechwood Street that would necessitate the closure of the road at Bound Brook on Thursday of last week. We were advised by the consulting engineer to plan on closing the whole road. Well, we turned out to be a bit more fortunate in that most of the road was kept open. However, when the safety of the residents is at stake, it is always better to err on the side of safety. Consequently, in addition to the normal police presence at the closure, the Town had a staffed fire truck on the west side of the closure. Thus, the fire/rescue crew could respond to any emergency without having an immense time penalty by going the roundabout way through Situate. Similarly, the police had a cruiser with an officer on the west side of the closure.

Now, let's talk about what was going on during that day. We mentioned previously how Beechwood Street actually travels over a very important 200-foot long dam located between Bound Brook Lane and Mill Lane. This dam is an important part of maintaining the level of our drinking water supply in Lily Pond. Further, there are two culverts that pass through the dam. It is these culverts on which we'd like to focus.

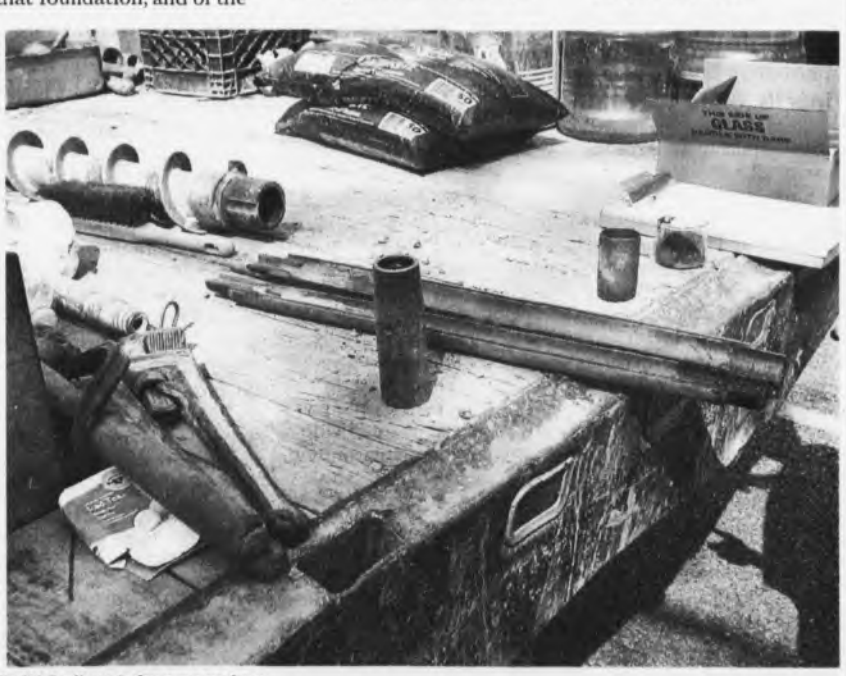
Years ago, when the dam was originally built, Beechwood Street was a much narrower roadway. The twin culverts that pass through the dam were constructed of granite slabs, as was the custom years ago. As we get closer to modern times, Beechwood Street was considered to be too narrow to carry the traffic that was now an everyday occurrence. Consequently, the road was widened and the culverts were lengthened to accommodate the wider road. The culvert extensions were made of corrugated metal and merely butted up against the granite culverts.

Now we fast forward to today. What Cohasset has is a granite culvert that is starting to show signs of the large granite slabs shifting. And, the metal culvert has begun to seriously deteriorate. In addition, the place where the granite section and the metal section meet has deteriorated and is leaking. To summarize, the Town needs to do something to rebuild these culverts to avoid serious consequences. The obvious answer is to rebuild these two culverts.

Now, we are getting to the meat of the matter. In order to design new culverts, there is a critical piece of information about this specific site that we don't have. Our engineers need to know the load bearing capabilities of the soil under the culverts. This is very important, because any new culvert needs to sit on a good foundation, like any good building practice would require. The design of that foundation, and of the culvert for that matter, depends on the load bearing capabilities of the soil on which the foundation will rest. This may sound very esoteric. But, look at it this way. If you are going to build a structure on granite, you would not need as robust of a footing as if you were going to build on sand. This is exactly the same situation.

Overview of drill rig. COURTESY PHOTOS

Close up of auger with hollow tube inside.



So, we are taking soil borings so that we can have a new culvert designed for us. Now, let's look at the process of soil boring. The first photo shows an overview of a large truck with a vertical diesel powered auger, or large drill bit. The auger is driven into the ground. The goal was to take earth samples down to 20 feet below the roadway. Now here is where it gets tricky.

The auger has a hollow tube located in its center. Thus, as the auger is driven downward, the hollow tube is pushed into the soil and whatever soil is at that level is pushed into the hollow part of the tube. The second photo shows a close-up of the auger. It has the hollow tube inside so you can't see it in the photo.

The last photo shows the hollow tube after it has been removed from the center of the auger. Lo and behold, when removed, the hollow tube actually opens up into two-1/2 pipes. This makes the soil sample visible and it can easily be collected for laboratory analysis.

Perhaps that's the long way around, but that is what was going on in Beechwood Street on Thursday, July 21st. We need to design a new culvert and sampling the soil was a very important step. The design of a replacement culvert is a mandatory component in the Dam Report that our consultants are preparing for the Massachusetts Office of Dam Safety. We'll keep you posted as this project moves forward.

HEALTH NOTES

Information overload – and diet

STEVE BOBO

Have specific outcomes in mind, such as improving athletic performance, weight loss, weight maintenance or improving blood pressure, but good health is at the core of any effective diet plan.

Too many problems are being thrust upon us at once. Recent facts about the obesity of children, for example, speak to the need for certain classes of families to control their diet. One source proposed that children with obesity problems in some families be placed in foster care. We need to be careful, when proposing expedients to solve problems, and select those that seem to have the best probability of success. It's often difficult to know the best way to solve a problem when it becomes apparent. The appalling spectacle of seemingly impossible recent events, both here and abroad speaks to a problem individuals are having about selecting the right facts from which to make decisions. We observed an event like that in Norway and concluded they are the doings of a madman. It's up to history, in a broad assessment of current experience, to garner a message from the information from such an occurrence. Similarly, many modern problems, (example: control of guns or explosive materials)(too many weapons or insufficient knowledge of their fate in the hands of seemingly normal people); obesity in some children. Once we've sorted out the appropriate response, laws must be crafted or revised to reduce the threat of recurrence.

Our important problems: How do we respond to these seemingly bizarre occurrences in the context of our daily lives? The classic method for thinking about global problems is to first consider those which are likely to affect us most. If the answer results in a low probability of having any effect, we tend to commiserate with those affected but we do little. Surely, everyone wishes to help, but no one has a plan. The Norway news immediately seems to speak to us saying "is such a thing apt to happen to us in our neighborhood?" What are the probabilities? Probably near zero.

Too many bits of information soon clutter our minds and divert us to thoughts from those that we need to accomplish our joint personal goals. Thus, we need to get back to our own agenda. Little enough time remains for us to accomplish our own planning. One of the expedients for solving the problem, of obesity in children for example, proposed in a recent article in the press is to place young obese kids in foster care. Such a proposal is the epitome of thinking in a segregationalist society.

Obesity and diets in general: The reality is that changing dietary properties of modern foodstuffs and evolving packaging in American society are causing apparently healthy foods to become booby traps that lure kids into making inappropriate snack choices. All foods are changing as a result of various demands in the industry; most are better and healthier and to a great extent, the changes are recognized and accepted.

To accommodate any changes in what you eat, it's necessary to ensure that you have a consistent set of guidelines for the regular foodstuffs which appear in your diet.

Dietary planning: Here are some ideas relating to what and how we eat. If you have a say in either planning or preparing meals, keep a list to track your meals and your record of success. Such a list helps in avoiding successive mistakes. Take care of every important list item as soon as possible and hopefully in the order you selected as being the most important.

Overview: Have specific outcomes in mind, such as improving athletic performance, weight loss, weight maintenance or improving blood pressure, but good health is at the core of any effective diet plan. A balanced diet addresses the symptoms of unhealthy eating, such as weight issues, fatigue, high cholesterol, low energy levels and stress.

Identification: The first principle of diet planning is to incorporate health-centered foods and menus. Foods and beverages that supply calories are the heart of an eating plan. They significantly impact your weight and health. To make healthy choices, you should know how much food from each food group you need, as well as which foods in each group make the best options.

Significance: A healthy diet can help you avoid preventable risk factors for heart disease. It also potentially improves existing health problems that are detrimental to cardiovascular health. The National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute says risk factors include high blood pressure, high cholesterol, diabetes, physical inactivity, being overweight and smoking. Women over the age of 55 also have increased risk for heart disease.

Function: Healthy diet planning addresses energy needs, weight goals, heart health, nutrition and quality of food choices, which all support a healthy lifestyle. A balanced diet supplies the energy and nutrition that your cells, tissues and organs need for healthy growth and development. No matter what your reasons are for managing your food intake, the side effects of making smart eating choices are reduced risks for diet-related and weight-related illnesses.

To plan a healthy diet: Identify your energy needs first and then determine which foods should supply those calories. Maryland Medical Center reports that moderately active women can calculate calorie needs by multiplying weight in pounds by 12. Moderately active men can estimate energy needs by multiplying their weight by 15, while less active men should multiply their weight by 13. This gives an estimate of calories needed daily to maintain current weight. To lose weight, subtract up to 500 calories from your daily calorie target to support a healthy rate of weight loss.

Components: Focus menu planning on fruits, vegetables, whole grains, low-fat milk products and sources of lean protein. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention identify several plans as dependable guides for eating a balanced, health-centered diet.

FOR THE RECORD

A wicked important change is coming

GREGORY MATHIS

GREGORY MATHIS

What did we ever do before email?

Email has been both a blessing and a curse in our business.

It has opened lines of communication like never before, making it easier and quicker to get information from the public to use in print and online.

We get everything by email these days: photos, stories, press releases, news tips, kudos and complaints. Faxes and snail mail correspondence are few and far between.

It's also a great resource for us to communicate with the public.

Recently, one of our reporters was trying to get in touch with someone for a story. They left three voicemail messages for the person and still hadn't heard back. Frustrated, the reporter was able to find an email address and sent the person a note asking for an interview. The person got back to them right away.

It seems the telephone and voicemail are becoming obsolete as well, unless of course you have a Smartphone and access to your email, which most people seem to have.

So the blessing is that email has allowed us unprecedented access to the public and them to us at all hours of the day, any day.

On the other hand, the curse is there is so much volume it's hard to keep up with it all, especially the spam and junk mail.

I could easily spend eight hours of the workday just dealing with email. Not only processing information to be used in the newspaper and on the website, but responding to various requests and deleting junk and spam email.

Regardless of the increasing volume and time commitment, email is a critical form of communication and one we could not live without in our business.

That's why it's important for people to note that at the end of September, our email addresses will completely change over to @wickedlocal.com. For most, the address is first initial, last name, @wickedlocal.com. For instance, my email is gmathis@wickedlocal.com.

We have been transitioning from our @cnc.com accounts for the past four months, and during that time, any email sent to @cnc.com has been rerouted to the @wickedlocal.com address. That will still happen through the end of September, but at that time, we're looking to make the transition complete.

The thought of people not being able to reach us when that move finally happens has some on edge. The @cnc.com accounts have been in use for more than 15 years, so many of you know us longtime newspaper people by that email address.

Since GateHouse Media bought Community Newspaper Company (that's what the CNC stands for) almost five years ago, we have gradually moved away from the CNC branding. With the launch and success of our Wicked Local websites, we wanted to expand that branding more by incorporating it into our email addresses. Plus it's easier to explain and say to people. I can't tell you how many times I've had to use code to explain those three letters to people — "Charlie, Nancy, Charlie dot com."

Wickedlocal will be a lot easier to remember.

We'll continue to remind people of the new address over the next two months, but please make note of the upcoming change and update your address book now. We'd hate to miss your important email.

Gregory Mathis is editor-in-chief of GateHouse Media New England's South unit, with offices in Marshfield, Plymouth and Raynham. He can be reached at gmathis@wickedlocal.com.

Carillon recitals every Sunday

The Cohasset Carillon is the largest carillon by number of bells (57) in New England and can also claim the oldest continuing annual recital series in North America. In 1925, one year after the installation of the first set of bells (23), President Calvin Coolidge and his wife Grace stood on Cohasset Common, listening to Kamiel Lefevere play a program of popular songs, including "Annie Laurie."

The 87th annual Summer Recital Series continues each Sunday until August 14 at 6 p.m.

- July 31: Gordon Slater (Canada)
- Aug 7: Lee Cobb (Lake Wales, Fla.)
- Aug 14: Jonathan Lehrer (Cambridge, Mass.)

Cohasset Common, in the center of town, is one of the best listening places. Parking is ample and free. Bring your lawn chairs or a blanket along with a picnic supper to enjoy on the Common while the bells are ringing. After each recital, a brief tour of the tower is offered for those interested in seeing the instrument in the playing cabinet and the bells in the tower above.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE: Beacon Hill Roll Call records the votes of local representatives and senators on one roll call from the week of July 18-22.

ALIMONY CHANGES (H 3617)

House 151-0, approved and sent to the Senate a bill making sweeping changes in the state's alimony laws including ending lifetime alimony payments in many cases. Current law provides only one category of alimony. The bill creates four specific categories, all with durational limits, including general, rehabilitative, reimbursement and transitional.

The duration of payments is based on the number of years the couple is married. For marriages of five years or less, the maximum alimony term would be 50 percent of the number of the months of marriage; 5 to 10 years would be 60 percent; 10 to 15 years would be 70 percent; 15 to 20 years would be 80 percent; and more than 20 years would be up to the judge.

Other provisions end alimony when the paying spouse reaches full retirement age; make it possible to cease payments when an ex-spouse is living with someone else in a marriage-type relationship; and prohibit judges from the current practice of considering the income and assets of the payer's second spouse when calculating how much alimony the payer can afford.

Supporters said current alimony laws are outdated and hearken back to the time when women did not work outside the home. They noted the proposal would encourage both parties to terminate their relationship upon divorce and live independently as soon as is practical. They argued that many unemployed husbands are burdened with unnecessary and unfair lifetime alimony payments they must come up with even if they are laid off.

SUPPORTIVE HOUSING (S 1967)

Senate 38-0, approved and sent to the House a bill that would require the creation of up to 1,000 units of Supportive Housing in Massachusetts by 2015. According to the Citizens' Housing and Planning Association (CHAPA), Supportive Housing is defined as "affordable housing linked with supportive services designed to help tenants with modest incomes maintain housing stability and maximize their independence."

Supporters said the measure would help persons with disabilities, seniors and homeless families who need help and services live independently. They argued the proposal does not cost the state any new money but rather uses existing resources for this project.

IN-STATE TUITION RATES FOR ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS (H 2109) - Gov. Deval Patrick made an unexpected appearance and testified before the Education Committee in favor of a bill that would allow illegal immigrants to pay in-state tuition rates and fees at Massachusetts colleges and universities if they have attended a high school in Massachusetts for at least three years and have graduated or received the equivalent of a diploma. The measure also requires these students to provide the college with an affidavit stating that he or she has filed or will in the future file an application to become a citizen or permanent resident.

Patrick said the bill is a fair one and noted many of these students had no choice about coming here - they were brought here as young children by their parents.

Other supporters argued these hardworking students are currently required to pay out-of-state tuition rates that are up to five times higher than the in-state rate.

Opponents said the state should not offer financial rewards to anyone who has broken the law and is in this country illegally. They argued it is outrageous to offer low tuition to these students while legal citizens from outside Massachusetts, including war veterans, are required to pay higher rates if they attend a state school here.

ETHICS CHANGES - The House refused to suspend its rules to allow debate on a motion to set a day and time for debate on a proposed Republican-sponsored package of changes to House ethics rules. Instead, the House referred the motion to the Rules Committee where if history is any indication, it will die.

The proposed changes include prohibiting lobbyists from entering the House Chamber and the Legislators' Lounge; limiting lobbyists' access to representatives and their staff unless wearing a badge identifying them as lobbyists; allowing legislators and their staff to make only written, not oral, recommendations for people seeking government jobs; requiring representatives and their staff to report any unethical or criminal conduct by any other representatives or staff; and forbidding representatives and staff from contacting public entities regarding pending contracts before the decision on which company to award the contract is made.

POOLING OF TIPS (H 2294) - The House gave initial approval to a bill allowing some fast food restaurant shift supervisors to share in the tips received by the other employees. Current law does not allow these supervisors to share. The measure excludes supervisors with the power to fire and hire.

The proposal was approved by the House and Senate in 2010 but Gov. Deval Patrick sent it back with an amendment. The bill eventually got tied up in the Senate where it died.

EXPAND BOTTLE BILL - The Committee on Telecommunication, Utilities and Energy heard testimony from both sides of legislation that would expand the state's existing bottle bill law which requires a deposit on beer and soda containers. The measure would also require deposits on bottles of water, tea, juice and sports drinks.

Supporters said consumption of these beverages has grown dramatically since the original law was passed in 1980. They argued expansion would increase recycling and pointed to figures that show recycling rates for bottles that require a deposit to be some 80 percent while those without a deposit have a 20 percent return rate. They noted expanding the deposit would help the environment and raise some state revenue because any unclaimed deposits currently go to the state.

Opponents, led by supermarkets and other retail stores, said the increased burden and costs for retailers would be passed along to consumers. They argued the state should instead conduct recycling education campaigns and promote greater use of public recycling bins.

BUY LOTTERY TICKETS ONLINE (S 132) - The Committee on Consumer Protection and Professional Licensure's hearing included legislation that would create a pilot program to test the online sale of Massachusetts Lottery tickets.

No one testified in person but supporters and opponents both submitted written testimony.

Supporters said the state should take the lead in exploring this option that would likely increase Lottery sales and reach a younger, tech-savvy market.

Some opponents said online sales would hurt many small mom-and-pop stores that currently sell tickets. Others said the pilot program is illegal because federal law prohibits online gambling.

Supporters point out currently five states -- New York, Minnesota, Virginia, Maryland and North Dakota -- sell lottery tickets online but opponents said some Bay State officials interpret the federal law differently.

Beware of sexting

CHIEF MARK DELUCA

It is a felony in Massachusetts to possess, store, or disseminate nude, or semi-nude photographs of a child under the age of 18.

Texting has become a way of life for many. The ability to send a message in seconds without actually speaking to somebody is amazing. With all new technology come inherent dangers. The danger I'd like to address is sexting and the possible effects it may have on our kids.

An increasing trend has been the distribution of inappropriate pictures of our kids. Some pictures are taken by friends and some are taken by the child themselves and they are sent via text message or e-mail.

Let me first address the legal aspect of sexting. It is a felony in Massachusetts to possess, store, or disseminate nude, or semi-nude photographs of a child under the age of 18. It's a felony punishable up to 20 years in State Prison with fines up to $50,000. Other potential consequences may include mandatory registration with the Sex Offender Registration Board, destruction of devices used to take, store or disseminate the explicit materials and a mandatory DNA sample to be placed into the state's data bank.

As you well know, with today's technology a single message or picture can be sent to millions and millions of people with the touch of a button. Additionally, information is easily accessed with little security.

A felony conviction can effect student admissions, student loans and would severely limit their employment options. Even without a conviction the humiliation and emotional stress would be difficult to deal with, at best.

Sexting may seem harmless but at what point is it OK to send inappropriate photographs of yourself? Please think twice before you put yourself in the position to turn your world upside down. Remember; once you have allowed an inappropriate photo to be taken or send it to another you no longer have control of where it may go or who will see it. Finally, I would ask parents to please ensure that their children understand the consequences associated with sexting.

Mark DeLuca is the Cohasset Chief of Police.

LIVING WELL

New guidelines for sun protection

JOAN F. WRIGHT, CMC

While July is UV Safety Month, it's important to protect your skin all year long. Sun damage can happen on the ski slopes and ice pond as well as on cool or cloudy days.

Have you ever stood in that store aisle facing all those sunscreen products and wondered which one is best? The Federal Drug Administration (FDA) might have just simplified that choice for you. In its recent report, the FDA issued new guidelines for sun protection, particularly product labeling of sunscreens.

Most prominent among the FDA's recommendations is the need to protect against UVA rays as well as UVB rays. Sunscreens offering both areas of protection provide a "broad spectrum" of protection. Only broad-spectrum sunscreens with an SPF of 15 or higher can state they protect against skin cancer when used as directed with other skin protection measures. Sunscreens with an SPF of two to 14 will be required to warn that do not help prevent against skin cancer or skin aging.

Sunscreen companies have one year to retool their labels, including removing claims that they are "sweat-proof," "waterproof" or "sunblock." No sunscreen is truly waterproof or sweat-proof, and the FDA recommends reapplying sunscreen after getting wet and frequently throughout the day. In fact, sunscreens cannot claim they provide more than two hours of protection without reapplying the product.

Why all the talk about SPFs and sunscreens? Skin cancer is the most common form of cancer in the United States. It is also one of the most preventable.

The Skin Cancer Foundation applauds the FDA's new regulations and offers further clarification by providing their seal of approval on sunscreen products that meet stringent criteria for safety and effectiveness. Their website offers a list of products that have received the seal. Visit skincancer.org/seal for more information.

Sun protection goes beyond sunscreen products. The sun not only damages the eyelid, but also can harm the cornea and cause certain types of cataracts as well. Sunglasses are as important as sunscreen, but when choosing sunglasses, don't be fooled by labels that you might infer offer sun protection. For example, while "polarized" lenses cut down glare, unless specially treated, they don't protect against UV or UB rays. Likewise, mirror lenses help block visible light but don't necessarily block UV rays. Wear sunglasses that offer 99 to 100 percent of both UV and UB protection.

Broad-rimmed hats offer another layer of protection, as does special sun-protective clothing. We might think putting a T-shirt on the kids when they're in the water protects them, but be careful of the color. Darker colors work better to protect against the sun. A dark blue long-sleeved shirt offers good protection, while a white T-shirt, for example, only offers a SPF rating of around six. Get that white T-shirt wet, and the protective value drops even more. Fabric matters, as polyesters reflect the sun while cotton often absorbs it. Again, the Skin Cancer Foundation offers recommendations for clothing.

While July is UV Safety Month, it's important to protect your skin all year long. Sun damage can happen on the ski slopes and ice pond as well as on cool or cloudy days. So develop good habits in July, and keep them going year-round!

CAT DAM

Let us hope it is not too late for common sense to be restored, and that we can avoid endless, fruitless and costly dispute.

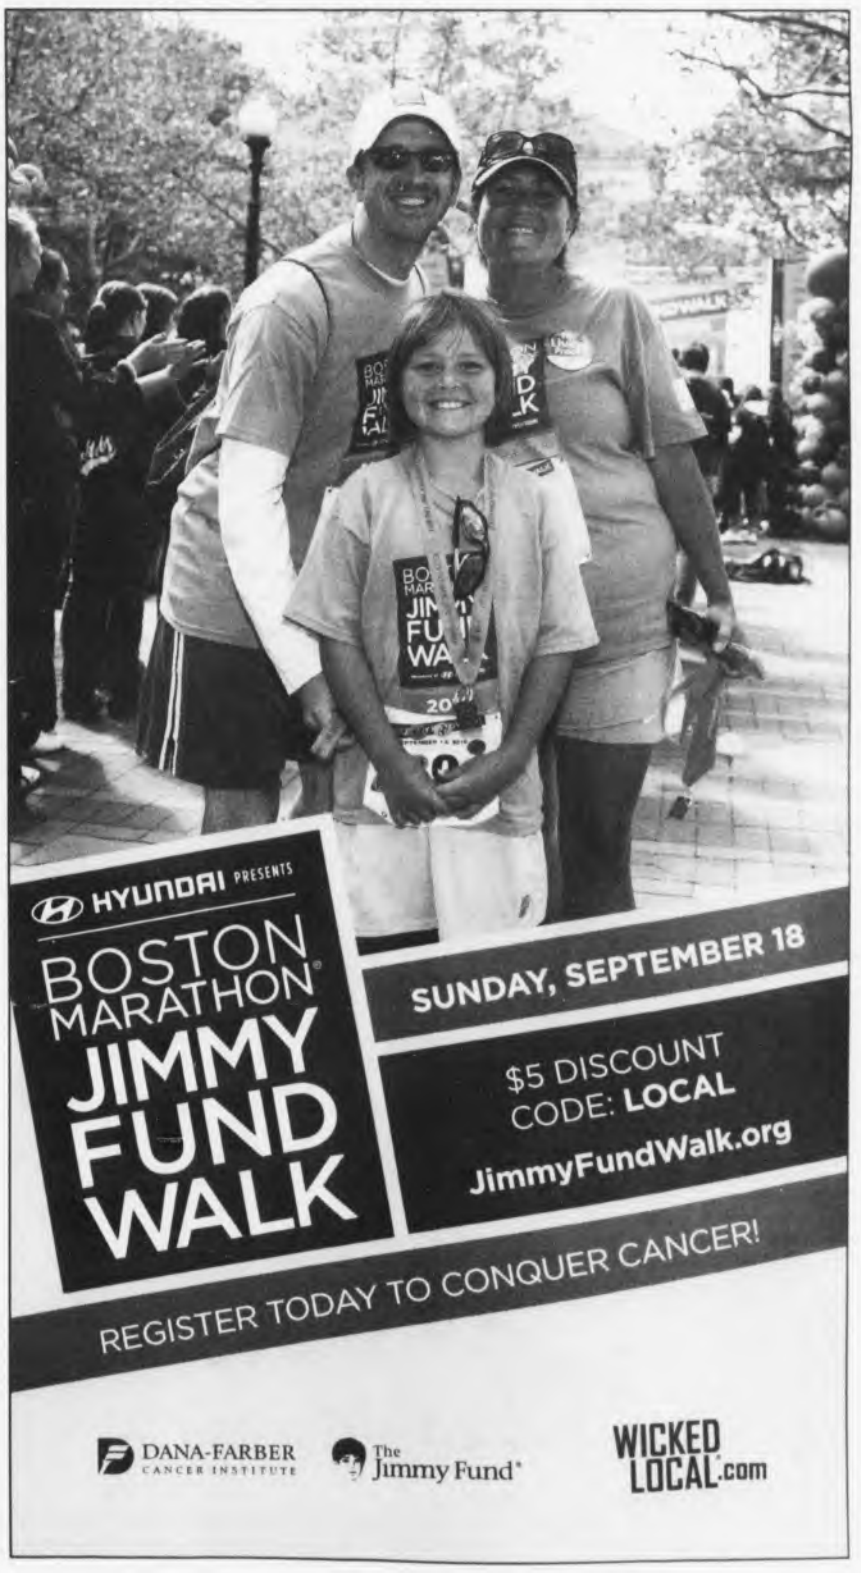
let their private enthusiasms nor environmental quirks of employees of state or federal agencies overshadow reasonable consideration of local issues.

Whether one believes that democracy was subverted or was demonstrated in the recent Cat Dam appointments must depend on one's understanding of the issues and of the stances of the participants. None of the critical letters in last week's Mariner demonstrated adequate and unbiased understanding.

For many years, the Cat Dam gates have successfully kept Inner Little Harbor from returning to its former unbearably odiferous state by retaining a few inches of water cover instead of exposing the mud flats to the sun, while retaining considerable tidal flushing. The solution was not perfect, but was demonstrably was much less imperfect than its natural state. Over the years, the operation of the gates has been improved, and the latest Notice of Intent should yield even better results. But a few years ago a small group of residents decided, despite the successful experience of many years, that the environment would be improved by abandoning the tidal gates. They have appealed to state agencies, which of course have an emotional bias against human intervention and for a "return to nature" but have no clear jurisdiction on the issue. They were bolstered by an amateurish and harmful report prepared by a consultant hired by the town but which was rejected by a majority of the Selectmen yet somehow found its way to state agencies.

Despite the evidence of successful experience and the reasonable oversight by the Board of Selectmen, the Conservation Committee claimed jurisdiction and appears to give more weight to the "naturalist" notions of the state employees than to the evidence. To preserve their interest in avoiding the environmental degradation that would follow abandonment of the Cat Dam gates, the E20 group engaged a credible and impressively knowledgeable consultant at its own expense.

Nor should the rights of the majority of the property owners be degraded by a tiny minority group which seems to believe that abandoning the Cat Dam's effective counter to nature's deficiency would somehow negate that deficiency.



The little group of dissenters are sincere, nevertheless their views seem to the product of emotion rather than of logical application of the evidence. Had they properly understood the relevant facts and been supportive of the well-tested management of water retention, everyone concerned would be quietly enjoying their local environment instead of suffering this ridiculous and potentially expensive cat-fight.

I am not a member of E20 nor acquainted with many of it members. But I do have a degree in Applied Science (aka Engineering) and sufficient experience to recognize perversion of science.

Let us hope it is not too late for common sense to be restored, and that we can avoid endless, fruitless and costly dispute.

R. Murray Campbell lives at 217 Jerusalem Road.

HUDSON – By the time the Massachusetts American Legion baseball tournament gets down to the Elite Eight, it's safe to assume every team is loaded with talent.

Sunday afternoon, Cohasset Post 118's run in the double-elimination tourney ended when Gloucester Post 3 southpaw Adam Philpott survived several bouts of wildness to hold the local team to just four hits over the first eight innings, en route to a 5-3 victory.

The fact that Philpott, who fanned nine, also walked eight kept the bases busy with Cohasset runners, but Philpott showed an uncanny knack of escaping most of the trouble he'd created.

"When there's only eight teams here from the entire state, you have to figure you're going to run into a hot pitcher sooner or later," said Cohasset coach Greg Taylor.

Cohasset had lost to host team Hudson, 7-5, on Saturday night.

Cohasset, featuring many of the same players from the state championship Cohasset High squad, battled all the way to the ninth inning, when they slapped out a couple hits against Gloucester reliever MacKenzie Quinn, but couldn't score.

Post 118 got a yeoman effort from right-hander Casey Burns, who took the complete game loss, while allowing only four earned runs on eight hits, while whiffing seven, walking six, and managing to plunk Quinn (who started at shortstop) twice.

Ironically, the only four hits Cohasset got against the big left-hander Philpott were from two players, as third

The look was not normally what Cohasset American Legion baseball General Manager and founder Scott Arnold was accustomed to.

Post 118 was rolling through Braintree for the second time in the South Sectional Tournament, leading 6-3 on the way to the team's first trip to the State Tournament in Hudson, but Arnold was not on the sidelines to see the final out.

"I was on vacation," said Arnold. "Can you believe it? The best moment for the program and I am away. I am exicted about being away, but I am also proud of the players. I kept in touch and read the internet to keep up."

The Cohasset general manager is not surprised by

GOLF NOTES

Don't always play by the rules

PAUL HARBER

During the Red Sox broadcast Sunday Jerry Remy said he was looking for a hobby. He needed something to do with his free time. His partner, Don Orsillo, offered plenty of possibilities, specifically to make light of Remy's penchant to nap.

Golf is the best waster of time for aging adults.

It is adult day care. So many wives are happy to see their husbands heading off to the golf course, simply to get them out of their way.

But Remy never had a desire to play. He was an athlete and only knows how to play by the rules.

And playing by the rules is hard and nearly impossible when it comes to golf.

The late, great Buddy Young, a top rules official for the New England PGA, boasted he could catch anyone breaking the rules – including the best pros in the region –and he could do it by following them for only two holes. He'd bet $5 and he never lost.

But when you are out with your friends, you don't have to play by any sort of rules.

Even the Rules of Golf give you that option in match play.

Especially if you are just a hacker and never going to break 100, just go out and have fun.

It will give every golf purist a heart attack, but you don't have to play by the rules. You can make up your own rules as long as they don't interfere with others on the course or hold up play.

When good friend Bob Cahill of Braintree hurt his back, it looked like he wouldn't be able to go to Florida for a winter golf junket with his good buddies.

But they told him he could tee up every shot on the course so he wouldn't hurt his back when he swung down on a ball.

I once played with a beginner, Mike Mann of Quincy. The rule we instituted in our game was when he hit the ball in the woods or water, or out of bounds, he could drop his ball at the edge of the hazard and simply play it there with no penalty.

When my son was young and we played, the rule was he could take over every bad shot he hit and they were considerable. He also could not get more than a two-putt.

As long as you don't hold up play on a golf course, play your own game. When you get better, then try playing by the United States Golf Association rules.

But the number one rule in golf should be to have fun. Don't beat yourself up.

O'Leary's day in sun

It was a wonderful day for Patrick O'Leary of Milton when he led the boys' division after two rounds of the Deutsche Bank Partners for Charity Junior Shoot Out, a 54-hole stroke play event conducted by the American Junior Golf Association at Plymouth Country Club last week.

The tournament field consists of 96 players from 18 states, including Ontario and Mexico.

His score of even-par 138 after 36 holes was the best.

On the second day, O'Leary played a consistent round with 10 pars and six birdies. He kept the ball in the fairway and capitalized on his wedge shots.

"I played a really solid round," O'Leary told reporters. "I had quite a few uphill putts, which are important to have on this course."

It was his moment in the sun. The following day Nick Rodriguez of Shrewsbury fashioned a final-round 1-under-par 68 for a tournament total of 5-over-par 212 to win the title while O'Leary scored an 80.

Still to lead for a day is an accomplishment.

Many of the AJGA's alumni have gone on to great things. AJGA alumni include Stewart Cink, Matt Kuchar, Hunter Mahan, Phil Mickelson, Tiger Woods, Paula Creamer, Cristie Kerr, Inbee Park and Morgan Pressel.

Khang ousted

Rockland's Megan Khang bowed out in the round of 32 at the U.S. Girls Junior Amateur Championship, falling in a three-hole playoff to Californian Anne Cheng in match play at Olympia Fields (Ill.) Country Club. Cheng, 16, led by two holes with two holes to play in regulation before the 13-year-old Khang rallied to take the final two holes and force a playoff.

Cheng prevailed when Khang bogeyed the 21st hole to finish their marathon as both golfers had to weather hot and humid conditions in the longest match of the day.

Cheng never trailed in the match, with Khang rallying to pull even four times through the first 11 holes.

Both golfers shot par on the first hole of sudden death and then bogeyed the par-4 second hole with Cheng pulling out the win on the par-3 third hole of the playoff, 3 and 4.

Cheng was eliminated later in the day when she lost her second-round match, 1-up, to Yu Liu of China.

Khang had qualified for match play by tying for seventh place in stroke play in a field of 156. She won her first-round of match play on Wednesday, 5 and 4, before falling in the second round.

Khang, who practices at the Harmon Golf Course and Pembroke Country Club, will return to the national stage when she competes in the National Junior PGA Championship Aug. 2-5 at Sycamore Hills GC in Fort Wayne, Ind.

GOLFERS OF THE WEEK

Steve Tasho & Matt Parziale

Thorny Lea Golf Club

Steve Tasho and Matt Parziale won their third consecutive Brockton City Fourball title a week ago, but the third one certainly didn't come easy.

The Thorny Lea Golf Club duo faced a formidable challenge from the Peabody brother pairing of George and Nick Zolotas before grinding out a three-stroke victory at 19-under-par (63-64-66-193) during the final round at Thorny Lea.

Parziale has known George Zolotas since their junior golf days and both of them have lived together in Florida and also often travel together on the professional mini-tour circuit along the East Coast.

When the Brockton Golf Association opened the tournament to broaden the field, Parziale extended an invitation to the Zolotas brothers, who finished second at 16-under-par (64-64-68-196) in their debut.

"I guess you could say we defended the honor of Thorny Lea against the guys from the North Shore," said Parziale. "It was fun out there, but it got real close at one point."

Tasho and Parziale held a one-stroke lead heading into the final round and cruised to a five-stroke advantage through six holes as the Zolotas brothers couldn't get it into gear.

The turning point came on the 16th hole. Parziale sank a 25-foot birdie putt, while George Zolotas' chip almost rolled off the green before suffering a comeback bogey to create another two-stroke spread.

"At that point, it's time to just play golf coming in," said Tasho.

Steve Tasho (foreground) and Matt Parziale (in background) win three straight titles. GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE PHOTO

For Tasho, it was his second triumph in a week. The previous Sunday, he teamed with Charlie Harlfinger to win the popular Filoon Cup at Thorny Lea before adding another City Fourball title to his resume.

"Another week, another trophy, huh Steve?" a Thorny Lea clubhouse waitress said, as she brought Tasho a beer to celebrate.

Amateur Public Links Championship tees off Aug. 2

By Paul Harber
pharber@wickedlocal.com

Defending champion Devin Bibeau will have his hands full when he visits Hingham Aug. 2-3 to defend his Massachusetts Amateur Public Links Championship at South Shore Country Club.

The Temple University undergrad will take on one of the toughest fields in this event's 30-year history and will be playing a course that in its hey day challenged the likes of Arnold Palmer, Gary Players and so many PGA stars of that era.

South Shore Country Club is not your ordinary public facility.

For the first sixty years it was a private club and its owners, the Farina family, brought many of the touring pros to Hingham in their early days of the PGA Tour.

His purse was as large as some of the best on the Tour in the 1950s and they would play in his Golf-O-Rama.

There are plenty of potential winners in the field. A year ago, Bibeau said, said he saw a lot of putts go in and it gave him a lot of confidence. That will be difficult at South Shore CC, which has some of the meanest greens you will find.

Who has the hot putter will probably win the tournament. Being below the hole is essential and if you are above the pin on some greens, you can wind up chipping your next shot if you are not careful.

But South Shore is not just about putting. There are plenty of opportunities to use your driver, but there are others where accuracy is essential.

Local knowledge is vital at South Shore, giving a foursome of South Shore CC members in the field, Rick Aherne, Joe Dimarzio, Chris Messina and Jim Forsgard, an advantage.

South Shore's version of Amen Corner, Holes Nos. 12 through 15, is critical. The par-4 12th demands are precise tee shot, the par-4 13th green is Formica-like fast and the par-4 14th must have been designed by Edgar Allen Poe while the 15th is a long par-5 that offers subtle treachery with every shot.

This is a public course that offers challengers you usually find at a private club, which it was until 1985. After developers purchased the course to build homes, the town of Hingham wisely took the land by eminent domain and restored the golf course.

Bibeau, who plays out of Highfields G&CC in Grafton, ran away with this championship last summer at Quashnet Valley on Cape Cod.

Now he will attempt to be the fourth champion to successfully defending his title, joining Harvey Ortof, Steve St. Amand and Billy Drohen, who is in the field and chasing his fourth Publinx title.

Bibeau was on fire last year. He stitched together a two-day total of 8-under 136, some six strokes better than second-place finisher Dan Falcucci of Cyprian Keyes.

Falcucci is playing much better these days. He qualified for the US Amateur Public Links at Bandon (Ore.) Dunes earlier this year and advanced to the match play phase of the championship. He can attribute his solid play this year to weigh loss. The 5-foot-9 Falcucci lost 35 pounds since last year's championship by cutting out junk food and joining his father in hot yoga exercise.

There are other threats as well. Massachusetts Amateur champion Ryan Riley of Easton, who won this title in 2009, hopes to continue his high caliber of play and put together a tournament like he did two years ago when he tied the Franconia GC course record with a 8-under par 63 on the way to a four-stroke victory in the Publinks.

Herb Aikens, 26, of Kingston, has game, too. He and Riley teamed to win their third consecutive State Four-Ball Championship in the spring at AAA and then he went out to Bandon Dunes (Ore.) and played magnificently, advancing to the Round of 16 is the United State Amateur Public Links Championship.

Besides three-time champion Drohen, 2008 champion Todd Ezold and 2005 winner Phil Miceli are in the field.

Kevin Carey, who teamed with Ray Richard to win the State Senior Four-Ball Championship, is entered. He also won the Seagulls Four-Ball and the Norfolk County Classic.

The 2009 Cape Cod Amateur champion Kevin Secia shared medalist honors this spring in the qualifier at Bay Pointe CC, fashioned even par scores.

At Heritage CC, Michael Pyne took medalist honors, fashioning a 4-under 67, one of three in red numbers. At East Mountain CC, Bobby Loguidice carded a 66 to take medalist honors and at Granite Links GC, club member Joe Harney put together a 3-under 69 for top honors while at Brookmeadow, Nick Marcoaldi was the medalist with a 2-under 70.

In the July 2 edition of the Cohasset Mariner, in the article The Girls of Summer, it was noted that the Under 12 girls softball team was the first team in Cohasset history to be entered in the South Shore Summer Softball League. There actually were teams that played in the league in the past, including an Under 14 squad that won the league title.

the fact that his team won their first Zone 6 playoff series since 1995 and first State South Sectionals games to reach the State Tournament.

"I have said since Day-1," said Arnold. "That when this team is together they can compete with anyone. This is the best team that we have put together. They are also all good people."

Arnold felt that Cohasset, which got past Medfield in best of three Zone 6 playoff series in two games and then rallied to defeat Barnstable and Braintree twice to earn their trip to Hudson had strong performances on the mound.

"This round," said Arnold. "The first thing that was impressive was our pitching. We used just five pitchers in 27 innings and they did a great job. Chase Michaud, Henry Lockwood and Connor Goetz in the first game, Casey Burns went deep in the first Braintree game and Jeff Cavanaro did a great job against Braintree in the second game."

The Cohasset offense was steady throughout the sectional tournament.

They were able slug step for step with a hot hitting Barnstable team from Zone 10 in the first game of the Sectional which featured 30 hits between the two teams.

Post 118 rallied from a late 14-11 deficit to pull out the 17-15 win to get into the winner's bracket of the double-elimination tournament.

"Everyone hit in that game," Arnold said. "Connor Goetz came up with a single and two doubles that were key."

They were also able to tear through a tough Braintree pitching staff twice in Braintree to claim their trip to Hudson.

Arnold felt that it was a good matchup for his team based on the season's matchup in Zone 6 East and their two post season games.

"We have been able to do it with the bats," said Arnold. "We beat Braintree four times and tied them once during the season. We felt that we had the edge this year."

The tie was a 17-17 battle that was called late in the season after seven innings because of darkness at Scituate. Cohasset had trailed 14-1 in that game.

The State Tournament in Hudson starts Saturday evening.

LEGION LOSS

baseman Jeff Cavanaro and left fielder Jamie Timothy each rapped out a pair of singles.

Timothy got the big hit, a basesloaded single in the fifth inning that plated two runs, bringing Cohasset within 4-3.

Despite the disappointment of their two weekend losses, Post 118 finished with an overall record of 16-8-1, while advancing to the final eight for the first time. The team only loses five players from this year's squad of 18, including Burns, catcher Matt Sheehan, second baseman Anders Goetz, Cavanaro, and outfielder Pat Stewart.

"This is the first time Post 118 ever got this far," said Taylor, "and I think it really opened our kids' eyes to the potential of Legion baseball. They got to see the quality of play here, and how many scouts showed up for these games, and I think they liked the whole atmosphere."

Of course, with much of his roster coming off a lengthy run in the state high school tournament, ending with a Division 3 crown for Cohasset, Taylor had a tricky prognosis this summer. On one hand, with all that talent, expectations were high, yet since they'd already won the high school title, it could not have been easy to get the team refocused and ready to start over right away.

"I realize it must have been tough for them to go through all of that playoff pressure with the high school, and then have to turn it around and start our season so quickly," said Taylor. "But all season long, every one of our guys has been here primarily to have fun playing baseball, and they've been a great group to coach. I couldn't be prouder of the way they battled this weekend, and I think they proved they can compete with anyone in the state."

A single and a walk made the first inning a bit too exciting for Burns, but he escaped the jam with a pair of strikeouts. Cohasset came back to manufacture a run in the bottom of the first, with two outs.

Cavanaro beat out an infield hit, and then stole second. As Dave Podurgiel was getting a base on balls, Cavanaro stole third. As Timothy worked his own walk, Podurgiel lit out for second, and when Gloucester threw to second, Cavanaro scored on the delayed-double steal.

Gloucester scored a run in the third frame, as Quinn reached on a two-base infield throwing error, and came across the plate on a single from catcher Brett Cahill.

Gloucester scored three times in the fourth, after Philpott led off with a walk.

Philpott moved up on a groundout, and then took third as Jay Fullmer scratched out an infield hit.

Gloucester left fielder Alex Ray then laid down a textbook squeeze bunt to score Philpott with the go-ahead tally. Colin Rogers then singled to score Fullmer. Rogers promptly stole second. When Burns had a breaking ball skid into the dirt, the ball caromed off Sheehan all the way to the third base dugout screen, allowing the speedy Rogers to score all the way from second base, for a 4-1 Gloucester advantage.

Cohasset managed a single and a walk in the bottom of the fourth, but that rally died with a pickoff. In the bottom of the fifth, however, Post 118 got back within one run.

Sheehan led off with a walk, and after two outs, Cavanaro singled. When Podurgiel walked, the bases were loaded for Timothy, who smacked a liner up the middle for two RBI.

Gloucester got an insurance run in the seventh, with a walk and two singles, the second one an RBI single down the left field line from first baseman Phil DiMaio.

Cohasset, which would strand nine runners on the day, couldn't really mount any late inning magic. Sheehan and Anders Goetz led off the ninth inning with singles, but a double play crippled that rally.

"I think their pitcher threw us off by being so wild early on," said Taylor. "(Philpott) was very tough today, especially given the way we can usually hit. When he had to, he could really hit his spots, and he was setting up his curveball well, dropping it over the outside corner. He'd be wild at times, but then he was able to really bear down and make the pitches he needed."

"I couldn't be prouder of Casey Burns," Taylor said of his own hurler. "Casey really battled all nine innings, like he's done all season. We wrote his name in the lineup and took it for granted we'd get that kind of gritty performance every time."

Part of Cohasset's problem could have been the quick turnaround in the tourney schedule, as their Saturday night game ended about 11:30 p.m., and they had to be back on the field about 12 hours later.

"Most of our parents got hotel rooms for themselves and the kids nearby, so the quick turnaround wasn't really any factor inmy opinion. I liked our attitude and I think we were good and loose coming in here today – but against a pitcher like that, it's awfully tough."

REGATTA

Friday evening, all regatta participants enjoyed a race clinic organized by Hingham native, Dick Callahan, a delicious pizza dinner, a dance, and parent reception.

Saturday's weather was beautiful and allowed each line to get in three more races before having to call it a day. By mid afternoon, sailors were racing in a breezy 10 knots, bringing a cool break from the heat and a welcome change from the calm winds.

Jumpstart a new career at North Bennet Street School

By Nancy Jenner
Director of Communications and Strategic Partnerships, North Bennet Street School

North Bennet Street School, located in Boston, has been teaching professional trades for more than 100 years. The locksmithing and the carpentry programs are designed to provide the equivalent of a multiple-year apprentice experience in under a year. The intensive, hands-on, nine-month training is a great way to jumpstart a new career or perfect the skills needed to advance quickly in the field.

Todd Gaines, a graduate of the carpentry program says, "The North Bennet Street School instructor was a wealth of information. I'd have to train under a master in the field for 10 years to duplicate what I learned at NBSS in less than a year. We learned how to do the work from the foundation to the roof and how to order supplies and get the site ready for construction."

"If you like working with your hands, solving puzzles, working independently and helping people, you have the skills needed to be a locksmith" says Dave Troiano, head of the locksmithing program.

"Locksmithing gave me the skills I needed to begin a new career," says Mary Jane. "I can't say enough about the North Bennet Street School ... the program is very hands-on, very fast paced and very thorough." DJ, who runs a successful locksmithing business, says "as a locksmith, no two days are alike. I completed a nine-month program and then briefly worked with another locksmith before opening my own business ... It's a timeless profession that is always in demand."

Both the carpentry and locksmithing programs are accredited by the ACCSC (Accrediting Commission of Career Schools and Colleges) and financial aid is available for qualified students. The programs accept students throughout the year for programs that begin in September for carpentry and September and February for locksmithing.

In addition to carpentry and locksmithing, the school offers programs in jewelry making and repair, piano technology, preservation carpentry, violin making and repair, bookbinding and cabinet and furniture making.

For more information about North Bennet Street School, visit www.nbss.edu or call 617-227-0155.

Career training at Porter and Chester

Porter and Chester Institute

Did you know that Porter and Chester Institute (PCI) has been providing career training in New England since 1946? With existing campuses in Westborough and Chicopee, PCI has expanded in the Boston area with two new campuses in Canton and Woburn.

Holding national accreditation through the Accrediting Commission of Career Schools and Colleges, recognized by the U.S. Department of Education, PCI offers comprehensive training designed around the needs of a changing job market in fields such as drafting and design, health care and electronics. Graduates are armed with the necessary skills to successfully enter today's job market. With career-focused training, students can concentrate solely on their industry-related classes that are directly related to their career goals.

Porter and Chester offers a variety of hands-on career training programs with their newest locations in Woburn and Canton. The Woburn campus is just 20 minutes north of Boston. This is the largest of the nine PCI campuses at more than 100,000 square feet. This newly renovated building has large classrooms with fully stocked labs filled with equipment that students will use in the real world.

The Canton campus is only 20 minutes south of Boston. This campus features a 40,450-square-foot building with all new, updated equipment in both the classrooms and lab. Tours are available, and prospective students can meet with staff at either of these great facilities.

PCI provides a structured curriculum based on what local employers are looking for. Through the school, students can earn a certificate in one of their focused career fields such as Automotive Technology, Computer-Aided Drafting and Design (CADD), Computer and Network Technology, Electrician, Electronics System Technology, HVAC/R (Heating, Ventilation, Air Conditioning and Refrigeration), Administrative Health Specialist, Dental Assisting and Medical Assisting.

Porter and Chester offers convenient day and evening classes, job placement assistance and financial aid to those who qualify, and PCI grads earn their certificate in just months as opposed to years. Porter and Chester's instructors have years of experience in the occupations they teach and are selected on the basis of their ability to communicate this experience to others.

PCI teaches more than technical skills. It also trains students to be employable, teaching practical, soft skills such as the importance of being punctual and dependable workers, traits that employers value highly. Porter and Chester can equip its students with the necessary skills to become a vital part of the workforce.

PCI has nine campuses in Massachusetts and Connecticut. In 2009, the Stratford and Enfield, Conn., campuses of PCI were awarded the School of Excellence Award from ACCSC. In 2010, the Chicopee campus was awarded the School of Distinction Award.

For more information, call PCI at 800-870-6789 or visit www.PorterChester.com. You can also check them out on Facebook. Not all programs are offered at all locations.

Aircraft repair program based in Bedford

By Nate Wade
Director of Marketing, National Aviation Academy

National Aviation Academy is a globally recognized aviation maintenance training academy in Bedford. Our 14-month program prepares students for certification by the Federal Aviation Administration. The FAA Airframe and Powerplant (A&P) Certification is required to perform maintenance and repairs on small aircraft, as well as the largest jet airplanes. The New England campus was founded as East Coast Aero Tech in 1932.

Located just 15 miles northwest of Boston, Bedford is an attractive, historic area between the towns of Lexington and Concord, near the Minuteman National Park. The campus comprises 36,000 square feet of space for labs, shops, classrooms and administrative offices.

Nearby Hanscom Field is one of the busiest airports in New England, serving both military and civilian aviation. Two NAA buildings form a campus that puts all activities within easy walking distance. The John T. Griffin Sr. building is a 30,000-square-foot facility on the flight line. It houses the school's administrative offices, several classrooms and shop/lab hangar areas for the Aviation Maintenance Technician curriculum. The Catherine A. Mayo building is a 6,000-square-foot facility containing modern classrooms and labs.

At NAA, training on a wide array of both jet- and piston-powered aircraft and equipment provides the highest level of knowledge and understanding of modern aviation practices. All practical phases of the program utilize the tools and equipment of the trade. Qualified and experienced instructors supervise all work. Projects are first demonstrated to establish procedures and techniques and then individuals work to develop judgment and refine skills. Students rapidly progress from basic to advanced projects, taking on greater responsibility and gaining a sense of pride and accomplishment.

Our 14-month program is designed with you in mind. We want to get you trained and certified so you can be out in the field starting your career. A recent article from Boeing states the industry will need more than 1 million aviation personnel over the next 20 years. If you're hands-on, enjoy learning how things work, and want a steady career that is in high demand, then consider the Aviation Maintenance Technician program at NAA.

CAREERS

Firefighters of today are highly trained, skilled professionals

By Matt Tota
GateHouse News Service

Today's prospective firefighters will enter a more multifarious, dangerous working environment than that of their predecessors 40 years ago.

In turn, the steps to becoming a firefighter have changed over the years—growing more numerous and complex—to address the ever-evolving profession.

"In this day and age of firefighting, there is a tremendous amount of information that we need to know," said Chief John Mauro Jr. of the Southborough Fire Department, who began his career in 1973. "We don't want to send people into a dangerous situation without the knowledge."

"The demand for people's time and the amount of training required has increased," he said. "It's becoming harder and harder to find good candidates."

Mauro said most firefighters today begin as either on-call or volunteer firefighters, considered entry-level positions.

On-call firefighters are paid hourly and with a monthly stipend, unlike volunteers.

Firefighters hoping to break into the field have multiple options available to them, said Jennifer Mieth, a spokeswoman for the state Firefighting Academy in Stow.

Mieth said some of the first steps include studying toward a fire science degree, working as a volunteer firefighter or entering an exploratory fire program.

From fire extinguishers to chainsaws, fire science majors learn how to wield the tools of a firefighter. They study, among other things, how to manage different types of fires, how to investigate fires and how to tackle hazardous materials. Schools that offer degrees in fire science include Anna Maria College in Paxton, Berkshire Community College in Pittsfield, Bristol Community College in Fall River, Cape Cod Community College in West Barnstable, Massasoit Community College in Brockton, Quinsigamond Community College in Worcester and Springfield Technical Community College in Springfield.

An exploratory fire program functions like an internship for young adults, introducing them to some of the things they can expect as a professional firefighter, said Mike Rosen, director of the exploratory program with the Holden Fire Department.

"We give an orientation, including a CPR course and first responder training ... and as much hands-on training as possible," Rosen said.

Those who complete the exploratory program develop a working knowledge of what to expect in the academy, he said.

Because most departments require it (though not all do), taking the Civil Service Exam is also a preferred option, Mieth said.

During the exam, candidates can choose three communities they want to work in, said Joe Fonseca, president of the Framingham Firefighters Union Local 1652. Fonseca said exams occur every two years and function like IQ tests.

Fonseca added that, more often than not, people who have served in the military are given priority over civilians.

When there are job openings for firefighters in a community, applicants are placed on an eligibility list, Fonseca said.

Nowadays, all firefighters must be certified as an Emergency Medical Technician. "If you are not an EMT, the city and town will put you through school to become one," Fonseca said.

"We are seeing a lot of kids that have already gotten their EMT certificates," he added. "If you're already got it, you look more attractive to an administration."

The next step is training, and that's when the state Firefighting Academy enters the process. However, the academy is not only geared toward new recruits but educates all firefighters, Mieth said, no matter how many years they may have on the job.

With courses in hazardous material incident mitigation, flammable liquids, stress management, water rescue procedures, confined space rescue techniques and rappelling, cadets at the academy are learning what it takes to become a 21st century firefighter.

SALOME'S STARS FOR RELEASE WEEK OF AUG. 8, 2011

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) A more harmonious aspect favors all relationships. Family ties with mates and children are strengthened. Libra is Cupid's choice to win the amorous Aries' heart.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) The bold Bull is ready to take on fresh challenges. Expect some opposition as you plow new ground — but supporters will outnumber detractors.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) An upcoming job change could mean uprooting your family to a far-distant location. Weigh all considerations carefully before making a decision one way or the other.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) A long-standing problem is resolved by a mutually agreed upon compromise. You can now focus on getting the facts you'll need for a decision you'll soon be asked to make.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) The Big Cat needs to be wary of what appears to be a golden investment opportunity. That "sure thing" could turn out to be nothing more than a sack of Kitty Glitter.

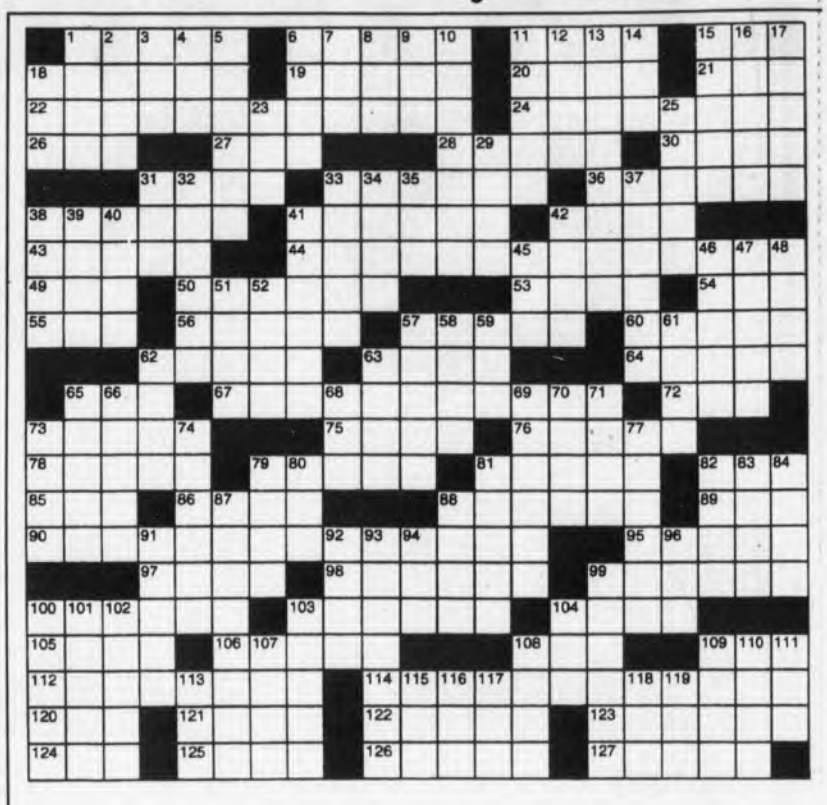
VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) You give of yourself generously to help others, but right now you must allow people to help you. Confide your problems to family and trusted friends.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Relationships benefit from a strong harmonious aspect. Things go more smoothly at work. Someone you thought you'd never see again asks for a reconciliation.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) A minor distraction interferes with travel plans, but the delay is temporary. Meanwhile, expect to play peacemaker once again for feuding family members.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Keep that positive momentum going on the home front. Arrange your schedule to spend more time with your family. You'll soon have news about that job change.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Control that possessive tendency that sometimes goads you into an unnecessary display of jealousy. You could be creating problems where none currently exist.



AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A new project holds some challenges you hadn't expected. But don't be discouraged; you'll find you're more prepared to deal with them than you realized.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Yours is the sign of the celestial Chemist, so don't be surprised if you experience a pleasant "chemistry" betwixt yourself and that new Leo in your life.

(c) 2011 King Features Synd., Inc.

BORN THIS WEEK: You enjoy being fussed over, as befits your "royal" Leonine nature. You also have a strong loyalty to family and friends.

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Cheerleading makes a comeback

Big changes for the Cohasset squad

By Erin Dale
edale@wickedlocal.com

School is not yet in session, but the new Cohasset cheerleading squad is already gearing up to take the 2011-2012 school year by storm. While practices won't start for a few more weeks, the girls are focusing on team building, team bonding, fundraising and getting ready to rock their brand new uniforms.

"This is a brand new team with a brand new goal," said coach Elizabeth Naughton, who is working to help the squad "singularly and consecutively be the best they can be as a team."

The Cohasset Skippers are fresh off of a successful debut at their first cheer camp, where they won an impressive amount of accolades, ranging from ribbons and trophies to a "team unity" banana, and, of course, the always-coveted spirit stick.

The camp was "unbelievable," Naughton said. "It

College student gives back through 'Cbay'

Starts own online business

By Erin Dale
edale@wickedlocal.com

While many college students are spending summer on the beach, 20-year-old Michael Filbey spent July launching a business from his bedroom. Cbay LLC might sound a lot like "eBay," but the "c" stands for three things: Cash, Charity and College.

Unlike other Facebook-era entrepreneurs, Filbey, a Cohasset native and soon-to-be sophomore at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, has more in mind than making a mint online — his business is all about giving back.

So how does Cbay work? If you've got stuff to sell that's worth over $75, but lack the time or know-how to get it sold, Filbey can take it off your hands. While you could go with a consignment shop or eBay, Filbey assures that he "can sell it for more."

Recently, he sold a fireplace for $1,100. Ralph Lauren shirts valued at $350 have fetched $125. Filbey's even sold a gazebo and swing set. Current wares up for sale include a wetsuit and a set of antique Persian paintings done on ivory bone.

"I've gotten everything from a septic insinkerator to Louis Vuitton bags," Filbey laughed. "It's quite the contrast."

When it comes to selling stuff online, Filbey's already a seasoned pro with a decade of experience. According to his mom, Suzanne, "He started listing and selling his old toys on Amazon when he was 10."

Using his knowledge of online auction sites, Filbey not only gets the goods sold and shipped off to buyers; he also ensures that his clients get 60 percent of the profit, a competitive amount compared to other re-selling services (Filbey even includes a page on his website that breaks down the differences between his business and other re-sell-

'Jug handles' protect cyclists

What
The "jug handles" are specially designed pathways in each direction at the North Main Street grade crossing that the MBTA installed in the fall of 2008 to help prevent recurring bicycle accidents. The jug handles veer off to the right, cross over the tracks at a near perpendicular angle, and then merge back onto the road.

Why
Before the jug handles, a bicyclist riding along North Main Street risked getting their bike's tires stuck in angled train tracks, stopping the bike in its tracks, often sending the unsuspecting rider over the handlebars, and in some cases, causing serious injury. In the 12 months before the jug handles were installed, the fire department responded five times to reports of an injured bicyclist at the grade crossing.

How
The engineering designs created two "jug handle"-type pathways on both sides of North Main Street. The jug handles are short bicycle paths – in the shape that the name implies – that allow bicycles to hit the tracks at an angle closer to perpendicular. Additional signage was also installed and the rubber matting at the crossing was extended a few feet on each side to accommodate the bike path.

EXTRA IN YOUR MARINER

Results
Bicyclists, who do not use the "jug handles," have been involved in accidents since their installation. However, the number of bicycle accidents at the grade crossing has been reduced considerably since the jug handles were installed. However, there have still been accidents for bike riders who for some reason have chose not to use the jug handle paths.

Quote
"We still have occasional accidents there with a few transports to the hospital," police spokesman Lt. William Quigley said. "The jug-handle paths only work when people follow the signs."

Signs at the North Main Street grade crossing warn bicyclists about the angled tracks ahead and to use the bike route. COURTESY PHOTO

Aquarion calls for voluntary water conservation

In the event the water demand is not reduced immediately through voluntary measures, the Company will be forced to reduce the water demand through mandatory water restrictions.

Aquarion Water Company is asking customers in North Cohasset to voluntarily reduce their water consumption. The higher demands are due primarily to watering of lawns through irrigation systems.

The Company is requesting all customers with irrigation systems, both permanent and temporary, to use water wisely. This means limiting the use of an irrigation system to no more than two days per week, before 6 a.m. and after 6 p.m., and ensuring the system is operating properly.

For additional information and conservation tips call the Aquarion's Customer Service Department at 1-800-928-3734, or visit www.aquarionwater.com.

Dog recovering from near drowning

Animal Rescue League will cover Foxy's care

By Mary Ford
mford@wickedlocal.com

A lot of people are rooting for a little 14-year-old Silky terrier named Foxy who is on the mend at the VCA South Shore Animal Hospital in Weymouth.

Foxy's story came to light Tuesday afternoon when, according to published reports, her owner – a 60-year-old Cohasset woman – allegedly tried to drown her at Nantasket Beach by dragging the dog by its leash into the water.

A witness flagged down a State Trooper who found the dog in the rear of her owner's car. The State Police asked for assistance from the Animal Rescue League of Boston. Hingham Animal Control Officer Leslie Badger picked Foxy up.

Critically ill, Foxy was taken to the veterinary hospital and Barbara O'Driscoll, who, reports say, was under the influence of alcohol, faces charges of animal cruelty and disorderly conduct. O'Driscoll, who was arrested by State Police and booked in the Norwell barracks, pleaded not guilty at her arraignment on the charges Wednesday at Hingham District Court. She could not be reached for comment.

Badger had to stop while en route to the veterinary hospital to give Foxy CPR. Efforts at the hospital have helped Foxy recover – although she still has a ways to go, said Dr. Martha Smith-Blackmore, director of Veterinary Medical Services at the Animal Rescue League of Boston.

"Foxy who weighs about 12 pounds was near death," Smith-Blackmore said Wednesday. "But she has had excellent intensive car, is on meds and fluids and is now in stable condition."

Smith-Blackmore said Foxy would remain in the custody of the Animal Rescue League which will arrange a foster home for her. "She is going to get the care she deserves until the legal situation is resolved," she said.

The Animal Rescue League is a nonprofit, charitable organization. Hospital care for Foxy, which the ARL is covering, is expected to cost $6,000-$8,000, Smith-Blackmore said.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE PROVIDES

Sex offender alert service

People who may be concerned about convicted sex offenders living or working in their communities are being urged by Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti to sign up for his email alert program to be notified when an offender takes up residence in the community.

"The state Sex Offender Registry Board maintains a list of Level 3 offenders – considered to carry the highest risk of re-offending – as required by law. Working in conjunction with the board, we created a program that allows the public to register with us to receive direct email alerts whenever a Level 3 offender lists his residence in their town," Bellotti said.

"As an additional public service, we carry on our website a complete list of Norfolk County residents, categorized by town, who are registered as Level 3 offenders," he said.

To enroll in Bellotti's program or to simply learn more about it, visit the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office website at www.norfolksheriff.com and click on the Sex Offender Registry heading. Approximately 1,300 people representing all 28 Norfolk County communities currently receive the alerts.

State law requires that people convicted of sex offenses must register with their local police department after their convictions. When a convicted sex offender finishes serving his sentence at the Norfolk County Correctional Center, members of Bellotti's staff drive him straight to his local police station to ensure that he complies with the law.

In accordance with the statute governing the Sex Offender Registry Board, Bellotti's email alert program only lists Level 3 offenders. Certain information about Level 2 offenders also is available to the public, but must be obtained by contacting the local police department.

Investigation continues in baby 'hoax'

By Mary Ford
mford@wickedlocal.com

Cohasset detectives are still waiting for information from Verizon about an apparent hoax phone call received last Monday night (July 25) from a woman saying she was having a baby and was behind the gas station in the village. Had the call come in on the 9-1-1 line, it could have been traced immediately, police said.

The woman was never found. Police searched the area for over an hour including Dumpsters and trash receptacles and called in assistance from the Scituate K-9 unit.

Cohasset Police notified area towns to check their gas station areas and police also called South Shore, Quincy and Jordan hospitals to see if anyone had just given birth.

Police also thought the incident might have been a ruse to tie them up while a crime was taking place. They sent cruisers to check businesses along Route 3A to be sure there was no suspicious activity.

Dog bite

A three-year-old, medium-sized, mixed-breed retriever bit a 60-year-old Cohasset woman on the hand who had come out to help the animal after it was struck by a car on North Main Street near Joy Place on Saturday (July 30) at around 7:48 p.m. Police said the dog that was running loose and did not have any tags was struck by a car driven by a 56-year-old Newton man.

The bite victim was administered first aid by the fire department (the bite had broken the skin) but refused transport. The animal control officer responded and transported the dog, which had injuries to its rear leg and hip, to South Shore Animal Hospital in Weymouth. The woman later went to the hospital on her own, police said.

Police said the Animal Control Officer has special equipment to deal with injured animals and that people should not try to help as the animal will try to defend itself.

Police found out who owned the dog the following day when it was reported missing and learned it had had all its shots. Police said the owner from Cohasset signed the dog over to the vet because he could not afford to pay the bill, which was over $1000. A Weymouth family adopted the dog and assumed the bill.

'Missing wife' waiting at Shaw's

An 80-year-old couple from Hull made it into the log last week after the husband, who suffers from Alzheimer's, dropped his wife off at Shaw's. The wife does not drive, police said. The husband, whose license is suspended, soon reported her missing and police located her waiting for him at Shaw's. Police brought her home and notified Hull police to keep an eye on the couple. The following day the couple was out driving again and was stopped near Stop &Shop. Police towed the car and cited the husband for operating after license suspension. The wife, who owns the car, was cited for allowing improper operation. Police plan to pursue the issue and ask the registry to revoke the license plates of the car.

MV crashes

• At 3:01 p.m. on Monday (July 25), police responded to a two-car accident on Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A) near Stop & Shop. A 1999 Cadillac Deville, operated by a 61-year-old Scituate man had stopped at the light when the Cadillac was "rear-ended" by a 2008 Nissan Altima, driven by a 65-year-old Marshfield woman. Both cars were headed north. Police said the Marshfield woman told them she had bent over to pick up her cup of coffee off the floor when the accident occurred. The Nissan had to be towed and the driver was cited for following too closely.

• At 11:34 a.m. on Thursday (July 28), police responded to a three-car accident on Chief Justice Cushing Highway (3A) near Beechwood Street. Police said a 25-year-old Hull woman in a 1997 Ford Explorer, attempted to pull out of the Gulf Station to take a left (south) toward Scituate when she collided with a northbound 2005 Toyota Corolla, operated by a 58-year-old Hull woman. The Toyota then crashed into a 2004 F750 dump truck operated by a 50-year-old Hingham man who was also headed north. No one was transported to the hospital; the Toyota was towed. The operator of the Explorer was cited for failure to yield the right of way.

• At 7:32 a.m. on Saturday (July 30), police responded to a call from a Jerusalem Road resident that someone had driven into his stonewall overnight. Police said the 46-year-old Cohasset man reported hearing a loud crash around 1:30 a.m., looked out but did not see anything. That morning he discovered extensive damage to his property. Police said a utility box had been ripped out in the crash exposing his cable and telephone service; the lawn and bushes were damaged and stonewall taken down. Parts of the vehicle debris at the scene belong to a Volvo. Police are investigating the accident.

Wild animals

Police received several calls over the past week from residents with wild animal issues. A King Street caller was told to release the skunk she had trapped. Police said it is illegal to relocate wildlife. A call about a raccoon on a back porch on Forest Avenue was referred to the animal control officer. Reports of a rabid fox on Jerusalem Lane could not be confirmed as no one answered the door when police arrived. Sovereign Bank was advised to call an exterminator after bank personnel discovered a chipmunk inside the bank on top of the vault. A Pond Street resident was able to get a bat out of her house before police arrived. A skunk made its way out of a Beechwood Street caller's garage without assistance as the Animal Control Officer, who only has 14 hours a week, was not available, police said.

Suspended license

A 47-year-old Weymouth man was arrested and charged with operating after license suspension and speeding last Tuesday (July 27) at about 6:56 p.m. An officer on radar patrol on Sohier Street clocked a 2010 Toyota Camry going 45 in a 30 mph zone. The officer stopped the car and further investigation revealed the operator did not have a valid license. His Maryland license had been suspended for nonpayment of child support, police said. He was placed under arrest and his car was towed.

OUI arrest

Responding to a BOLO (Be On the Lookout) from Hull about a rolling domestic (fight in a car), a Cohasset officer on patrol stopped a 2010 Ford pickup Sunday (July 31) at about 6:39 p.m. on Chief Justice Cushing Highway near Stop & Shop. The couple was no longer fighting; the officer contacted Hull police. After several field sobriety tests, the operator, a 39-year-old Duxbury man was arrested for operating under the influence of alcohol. His girlfriend was charged with domestic assault and battery and was turned over to Hull police.

Erratic operation

A 36-year-old Cohasset woman who was walking on Jerusalem Road near Forest Avenue reported last Wednesday (July 27) at about 11:47 a.m., a Jeep Grand Cherokee swerved across the road toward her. She said the occupants shouted at her.

Obscenities

A 43-year-old Cohasset man went to the police station last Wednesday (July 27) to report that while his 10-year-old son was riding his bicycle on Border Street toward the Sailing Club a white van passed by him near Atlantica. A young man inside the van yelled obscenities at him. The boy provided a description of the van and the man who yelled at him.

Some Music Circus recollections

By David Wadsworth
Special to the Mariner

In the summer of 1954 while in college I served as an apprentice at the still new South Shore Music Circus. Apprentices were unpaid youthful volunteers spending the summer learning first-hand the "ins and outs" of summer theater presented beneath the "big top" or circus style tent. The 1954 season included many well known, and some lesser known, music theater productions. Shows such as "Desert Song," "Carousel," "Oklahoma," "South Pacific," "Anything Goes" and "Student Prince" would be rehearsed for a week, then run for a week on the circular stage in the large tent. Leading actors and actresses often were well known Broadway performers. The resident company included men and women's choruses, corps de ballet, an orchestra and conductor, general manager and his assistant, general director, music director, lighting and sound crew, costumer, set designer, and box office personnel. Apprentices were "stage hands", building and painting the sets, carrying them on and off stage, running errands and occasionally having "bit parts" in the shows. On one occasion I had a minor role in the comedy "Anything Goes", being on stage long enough to play a photographer taking a picture of the leading man.

In 1954 "Bob" Roberts was general manager and the distinguished German musician Hans Busch was director. Englishman Arthur Norris was conductor of the orchestra; Gene Bayliss was choreographer. During the height of summer it would be sweltering inside the "big top". One night in particular stands out in memory. The environment in the tent was particularly tropical. The script called for the leading actor named Don Glancy to dance the Charleston. Afterward, the audience refused to allow him to leave the stage so he repeated the dance. Once again the audience signified it wanted more and the actor, a large man, had to do it a third time. After that he managed to escape and made his way to the back, sweating profusely at the point of total exhaustion.

1954 was the year that hurricane "Carol" devastated New England in September, followed by hurricane Edna some two weeks later. Members of the company fought valiantly to save the "big top" but after several hours the hurricane prevailed and the tent ripped apart. That brought the season to a premature end and cut short the production of the musical "Paint Your Wagon" in which I had a minor role. The following summer the Music Circus opened its season with "Paint Your Wagon" but that summer I was working elsewhere and not able to be on stage!

Pitching in for pancreatic cancer

Granddaughter organizes team for benefit walk

By Erin Dale
edale@wickedlocal.com

"Cohasset was his favorite place to be," said Leigh Laugelle, granddaughter of the late Rocco "Rocky" Laugelle. It's fitting, then, that the young Laugelle is appealing to her family's hometown to contribute to a cause that is near and dear to her heart, and to those who knew and loved her grandfather.

Laugelle has started a team for the New England Pancreatic Cancer Research Walk, which will take place on October 2nd at DCR's Castle Island in Boston, and has named it for her grandfather Rocco, a World War II veteran and former Cohasset selectman.

The team is called Rocco's Rivoluzione "because we're Italian," said the 23-year-old Laugelle. "But it's also a revolt against cancer."

Diagnosed with pancreatic cancer on Christmas Day in 2009, Rocco passed away on Dec. 19th of last year at the age of 82. He had four children, 12 grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, and many nieces and nephews.

So deep was Rocco's love for his hometown that, according to his granddaughter, "He'd wake up every morning and drive around Cohasset just to make sure it was still there."

Now, the town Rocco loved has a chance to show that their memories of "Rocky" and affections for him are still alive and well. Laugelle hopes to raise at least $1,000 for pancreatic research by doing the Castle Island walk.

Another goal is raising awareness for this "extremely painful" disease.

"It affects a lot of people," said Laugelle. "The more research is done, the more it can help. I'm obviously doing the walk for him, but I also want to get the word out."

Those who want to honor Rocco's memory can donate to Laugelle's walk, or join Team Rivoluzione and walk alongside the friends and family members who have already been enlisted.

"I know a lot of people would want to support it," Laugelle said of the walk, since her grandfather "had a lot of siblings, grandkids and a lot of family and friends that I know would want to be a part of it.

"I know how hard it is for families to deal with," she continued. "I don't like other families having to deal with it when I know firsthand how it feels."

PAN-MASS CHALLENGE

Inspired by Hingham teen

Cohasset woman to cycle for cancer cure

By Erin Dale
edale@wickedlocal.com

Michele Dorian Sacks will compete in the PMC as part of Team Perini in Jacqueline Desai's honor. The PMC raises money for the Dana-Farber/Jimmy Fund. PHOTO/ERIN DALE

In a house in nearby Hingham, an 18-year-old cancer sufferer is already doing her bucket list. This tragedy has motivated one Cohasset woman to join a team of cyclists in rallying around a very special young woman.

This Saturday, August 6th, 49 riders for Team Perini will tackle the Pan-Mass Challenge (PMC) to raise money and awareness. This team seeks to raise $160,000 for the Dana-Farber/Jimmy Fund.

This year's PMC has two major routes, from Sturbridge to Bourne and Wellesley to Bourne, along with 11 shorter routes for those who want to participate but can't tackle the two-day, 198-mile challenge.

Famous faces along for the ride include Lance Armstrong and John Kerry, who will be riding from Sturbridge to Bourne.

Michele Dorian Sacks, a Cohasset resident, interior designer and owner of MDS Designs, avid cyclist and advocate for cancer awareness, shared the story of Hingham resident Jacqui Desai, 18, with the Cohasset Mariner.

Desai was diagnosed in November 2009 with stage IV metastatic osteosarcoma, a rare form of childhood cancer, in her pelvis, sacrum and lungs. In less than two years' time, Desai has endured chemotherapy at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute at the Jimmy Fund Clinic and Children's Hospital in Boston, photon radiation treatments at Mass General, and major surgery to remove the primary tumor in her pelvis and sacrum.

While spending August 2010 to January 2011 in the hospital recovering, Desai had more surgery to remove the tumors in her lungs. Since healing from surgery meant having to take a break from chemo, however, the cancer spread further to Desai's lungs and spine.

Sacks heard Jacqui's story through friend Lisa Patterson of Hingham, who organizes PMC rides for kids with cancer, like Desai. Sacks signed right up.

Team Perini is headed by Timothy Perini, vice president of residential services at Starwoods Hotels & Resorts in White Plains, New York. While many riders on Team Perini hail from Massachusetts – Hingham, Medfield, Newton – and others from Vermont, New Jersey and New York, Sacks is the sole cyclist from Cohasset.

It's not her first time cycling for a worthy cause.

"I did the PMC in '03, '04 and '05," Sacks shared. "I also had a team of my own, Team Never Give Up, in honor of my brother-in-law." This team raised approximately $130,000 for cancer research.

"I've lost family members and friends to cancer," said Sacks. "Who hasn't? It's amazing to me that cancer affects everybody around the world."

Although Sacks has raised $3,575 for Team Perini, "I searched my soul and thought, how can I double it?

"I would like to become a heavy hitter," Sacks continued, which means she needs to raise $6,000 by October 1st. "I believe in my heart I can do it.

"I am so thankful to everyone who has contributed so far," said Sacks. "There s been so much support from the community and friends. I'm amazed when every day I go to my mailbox, and there's a contribution."

Desai was granted a bedroom makeover by the Make-A-Wish foundation to accommodate a sculpture made of 1,000 paper cranes folded by her friends and family. There were so many cranes left over that a second sculpture was made and hung in the Children's Hospital's main lobby. As Desai's family shared with supporters, the sculpture has "provided a respite for patients and parents as they entered" the hospital.

Since her battle with cancer began, Desai's made it her goal to elevate childhood cancer awareness to the same level as breast cancer, which, of course, has its own iconic pink ribbon.

With help from people like Sacks and her 48 fellow cyclists sporting "Riding for Jacqui" jerseys this weekend, perhaps Desai will get to do just that.
